What inducement is there to sacrifice time and labour to enlighten the flinds of a people through the Press, where there are comparatively no readers? Patrionic efforts in this direction fall still here to the ground. The indifference of the people themselves to everything which concerns public interests wall of hopelessness. Changes there must be in our material and social, if not our political condition. The thing is inevitable. But these changes will be uninfluenced by any thing within our own borders, except our passivity. Our incompetency to beneficial solf government in local matters is shewn by experience.
