A MISTAKEN IDEA

There are some people who still resort to drugged pills or alcoholic syrups to overcome colds, nervousness or general debility, and who know that the pure, unadulterated nourishment in Scott's Emulsion is eminently better, but refrain from taking it because they fear it may lead to excessive fat or obesity.

This is a mistaken idea, because Scott's Emulsion first strengthens the body before making flesh. Its blood-forming properties aid nature to throw off sickness by building health from its very source, and flesh is formed only by its continued use. Avoid alcoholic substitutes for SCOTT'S.

Illegal Mining and Bomb-Dropping

(Scientific American.)

War, in spite of the fact that it is the supreme exhibition of brute force, has its ethical rules of conduct; and the frightful game will be played fairly or foully, according to the humanity and sense of honor of the nations engaged.

It has been the constant aim of philanthropy to prevent war, altogether, or, failing that, to mitigate its savagery, and to shield the non-combatant civilian, so far as may be, from its horrors.

There has grown up, through the centuries, a code of practices and prohibitions designed to protect the non-combatant, which of late years has been revised and amplified by The Hague convention.

Long before this convention was drawn up, it had been agreed among the civilized nations that the attack of artillery upon fortified cities should be confined, as far as possible, to the engirdled fortifications, the trenches, camps, and other military elements of the defense, and that the thickly populated city itself should be spared. If military necessity called for the bombardment of the city, it has been customary among civilized nations to give notice of the fact, so as to afford time for the withdrawal of the civilian population.

The wave of indignation which swept around the world, when it was learned that a Zeppelin airship had stolen by night across the sleeping city of Antwerp and dropped high-explosive shells upon its civilian population, was a protest against a revival of the methods of war of the middle ages. Had the shells been aimed at one of the outlying or interior fortifications, or at the barracks, or the camp of the Belgian troops, so far from execrating the world would have applauded the feat as one of aeronautical skill and daring, and as giving additional evidence of the military usefulness of the airship. But to kill in their sleep the unarmed citizens of a state whose only cause of offense was that it objected to its domain being turned into a cockpit in which its neighbors could settle their quarrels, is to add a spice of vicious ferocity to the attitude of Germany toward a weak and unoffending people.

As upon the land, so upon the sea has Germany seen fit to ignore the rules of The Hague convention, which Germany signed, and which seek to mitigate the cruelties of war, so far as they affect the non-combatants both of the enemy and of neutral states. The Antwerp bombs find their counterpart in the mine-strewn waters of the North Sea—one of the most crowded thoroughfares of the peaceful commerce of the world.

The strewing of mines over the course followed by the enemy during an engagement, or the planting of mine fields for the protection of a country's own channels, harbors, ports, and dockyards, is recognized as a perfectly justifiable means of attack and defense.

This was done on both sides with deadly effect during the Russo-Japanese war. But during that war, and for many months afterward, the floating mines which had been dropped by the Russians and Japanese remained afloat, and drifting in the ocean currents, caused the destruction of many merchant vessels, often at great distances from the point at which the mines were first planted or dropped overboard.

The Hague convention attempted to remove this menace to the shipping of the world by rendering it obligatory so to arrange the mechanism of the mines that they would become ineffective after a certain period of time had passed.

This merciful provision Germany apparently has seen fit to ignore. She has sent her mine-ships out and has strewn the North Sea with mines, which, drifting far and wide, have caused the loss of a large number of the merchant ships, not merely of the enemy, but of neutral states. On the chance of sinking one warship of the enemy, Germany is willing to sink half a dozen unoffending merchant ships of the few maritime states with which she has had no quarrel.

That she is willing to incur this responsibility is characteristic of the spirit in which she is conducting her naval and military operations. Every ship flying the American flag that may have to enter the area of naval operations is liable to disablement or complete loss.

Never in all the history of the nations did a great people stand in such sore need of the friendly attitude of the outside world as does the Germany of today. That she realizes this is shown by the strenuous effort she is making through the press and by the mouth of her accredited representatives of high standing, to set herself right in the eyes of the people of the United States.

But what would be the effect upon this country if the news was flashed over the wires that the United States ship "Tennessee," let us say, in the performance of her errand of mercy, had struck a floating mine upon the high seas and had gone to the bottom?
