

popular reputation, but a sincere desire to obtain the means of wide-spread usefulness — the anxious wish of a benevolent mind to employ all its faculties to advance the welfare of the great masses of mankind whose destinies are influenced by the government and legislature of Britain.