December.

The December number of The Canadian Magazine will be specially illustrated, and will contain many important contributions. The character of these may be gathered from the following list:

- Hon. C. H. Mackintosh, Lt.-Gov. of the North-West Territories, will write of Cabot, Mackenzie, Fraser and Thompson, the ear y explorers of the territory now known as Canada.
- Joseph Pope, author of "Memories of Sir John Macdonald," will deal with the Cabot celebration, and offer a criticism on the present scheme of holding a Cabot celebration. Both this and the previous article will be important contributions to Canada's early history. Both authors are quite capable of dealing with the subjects which they have chosen.
- John Charlton, M.P., will deal with "Sunday Rest as a Civil Right," and will endeavour to show how Sunday Rest is socially and economically necessary to mankind.
- Gordon Waldron, B.A., will offer a criticism on the poetry of Lampman, Campbell, Carman and Roberts, and show wherein these writers have departed from the true ideals of art. As a critic, Mr. Waldron is quite capable of performing what he has undertaken.
- Ian Maclaren, will continue his story, "Kate Carnegie," which will be concluded in the January number.
- John Anderson, My Jo., By Jetna. This is a homely love-story with its scenes laid in Edinburgh and Quebec. It will be profusely illustrated by C. H. Kahrs, and is one of the best short stories ever offered to our readers.
- A Civil War, By John McCrae. This is a bright piece of dialogue—a society story of more than ordinary brilliancy. The author is one of the brightest of Canada's young writers. It will be illustrated by Brigden.
- A Priestess of Liberty, By Stanbury R. Tarr. A sketch of Mrs. Browning as "A Priestess of Liberty," and of her relation to the Italian struggle for liberty is especially opportune at a time when there are other prominent struggles for liberty in various parts of the world.
- Other Contributions. Besides the above there will be several short stories and poems by leading Canadian writers. The number will be especially Canadian, but not in the sense that only Canadian subjects, pure and simple, are worth discussing. The range will be broader than that.

Single Copies, 25 cts. Per Annum, $2.50. The Canadian Magazine, TORONTO, ONT.
