ended by questioning whether governments will take up the challenge now, or wait until they are pushed to the brink of crisis and beyond.

near de equitable tad semilive to the different zerds resources, and reponentitues or both the industrialized councies and the developing world. The industrialized worlds that's record, be noted, has not brea encouraging to building toth effective ministration concentions, and Nanth-South cooperation in particular. Mr. Wood concluded with a discussion of political constraints and experimenter Fe constant det first institutioned institutions and international non-governmental bofics case go no-ferther than the collective will of their untional governments. Mr. Wood was confidere, invester, that the will of ordinary people' to menage the threat of clinters there is becoming increasingly apparent. In specific the argumy of the problem, he