

often heard sermons of warning, but their hearts asked for a little more time to devote to worldly pleasure ; he urged them to live to God and prepare themselves. It was a singular coincidence that the deceased seemed to have inclined to God from his early days. He had been a Sunday School teacher in one of their branch schools, and his companions had remarked of him he was not like other boys, and was never heard to say a word that might not have been told to his mother. He prayed that God might sanctify this sad event both to parents and ministers, and make them to be more faithful in their several duties.

The solemn notes of the organ again sounded, and the coffin was borne slowly down the aisle. The troop had meanwhile opened out, and preceded by the firing party and the band, again took up place at the head of the procession, and the cortege again moved up St. Denis along St. Catherine and St. Lawrence Main streets to the Mount Royal Cemetery, where the last military honours were paid to the memory of this promising and lamented young officer.

Montreal Daily Witness, 16th April, 1868.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE CAPTAIN BRYDGES.

The funeral of Captain Brydges, of No. 1 Grand Trunk Foot Artillery, took place yesterday afternoon, from the house of his father, Mr. C. J. Brydges, Sherbrooke Street, with military honours. The funeral procession was long, and a firing party of 100 men of the Grand Trunk Foot Artillery, under Major Wallis, preceded it, followed by the band playing the Dead March and other solemn airs. There were six pall-bearers, the chief mourners being the relations of the deceased. The remainder of the Grand Trunk Brigade followed, also the High School cadets, staff and officers of volunteers ; Lieut.-Gen. Sir Chas. Wyndham,