

THE ACCEPTANCE OF SACRIFICE 187

time to come. For the rest, the State has certain powers. It may not choose to exercise all its powers on those who are accepting the sacrifices made for them and treating them as they do. In common justice the State should see that at least the pecuniary sacrifice made by those men shall be as great as the pecuniary sacrifice made by the fighters. It ought also to make sure that they are doing the necessary work of the country. The nation will do what remains to be done.
