If Reciprocity is Ratified

Notes Taken From a Diary Relating to a Trip Taken by a Father and Son, From New York to Port Arthur, A.D. 1915.

on the way to Niagara they noticed that business was booming, the factories working to their utmost capacity, etc.

Proceeding to Toronto and passing thru Welland the son remarked: "Father, what are all those dilapidated buildings and what are all those steamboats doing, with no one around them?" "Why, boy, a few years ago this was a thriving manufacturing centre, but of late years it has received a severe backset, and many of the former manufacturers are financially ruined. Those idle boats were formerly busy employed from the opening to the close of navigation, but new there is neither work for them, nor can the owners find sale for them."

In passing thru Grimsby the son enquires: "What are all these waste patches of land, all grown up with weeds?" To which the father replies: "Those pieces of waste land were formerly thriving market gardens and fruit farms, but of late this business has been unprofitable, and they must either be left idle or converted into farm lands. Many of the former prosperous occupants are ruined and are now working for a daily wage. It is sad to notice the same condition of affairs in the neighborhood of all cities in Ontarlo—in fact, Canada. Passing thru Hamilton the son notices a large pork factory lying idle, as altho other factories.

On entering Toronto the son asks: "Father, what are all these empty cars smashed with whitewash or some-leaving idee mills and no work in that into for former Canadians, but now the day wage and of Canadians, but now the factories.

On entering Toronto the son asks:

"Father, what are all these empty cars splashed with whitewash or something, on the side tracks; and those great idle buildings. I saw the name of Harris on one of them."

"Son, these cars were formerly used to bring cattle to the Toronto market, which was one of the most flourishing in Ontario. The space occupied by these pens was the cattle market. The large buildings you noticed were abattoirs. Now there is very little use for the cattle cars except for the transportation of cattle for local consumption, very little for the cattle pens none for the abattoirs."

We will now go to Midland and up the inside channel to Sault Ste. Marie On passing Newmarket the son sprang from his seat and exclaimed: "Father, Newmarket does not look a very large place. How is it they require such a big open drain?" "Son," replied the father, "that drain is called a canal, and the only way to make 't pay would be to build a high board fence round."

Dr. Adams Celebrates His 72nd Birthday

Toronto Dentist Who Was Ploneer Ir Work of Inspection of School Children's Teeth.

Dr. J. G. Adams, 86 Hazelton ave., celebrated his 72nd birthday anniversary on Thursday. It happened also to be the 12th birthday of his grandson, and a family gathering was held at the residence of Dr. Frank Adams, 100 Binscarth-rd., Rosedale. It is rather a curious circumstance that for 59 years there has been no rain on Dr. Adam's birthday. birthday.

Annual Meeting—Old Officers, Re-elected.

Patriotism characterized the annual meeting of the Centre York Conservative Association, held Saturday afternoon, in the Labor Temple.

Alex. McCowan, M.L.A., East York, was appointed to the chair during the election of officers, and Alex. Pringie, representative for Markham, moved that the officers of the preceding year be against elected. This motion was seconded by W. H. Pugsley, represent a summing the confidence of the confidence of the strike a dominant power of the British Empire, but in the event of the passing of the bill, Canada will be drained of her natural resources and there will be nothing left for her but annexation, and instead of the old motto of the buildog guarding the flag, and symbolizing 'What we have we'll hold,' it will be changed to 'What we had we sold.'"

Mr. Boyce believed that as soon as the thinking man gets all the facts about reciprocity his eyes will be opened, and independent of politics he will oppose the scheme as a menace will oppose the scheme as a menace will oppose the scheme as a menace to the preceding year bearing the confidence of canada.

At the same time, he declared that it would be well for the people of Canada to study the naval question in its broader aspects. The general impression seemed to run too much toward battleships and armored cruisers. "Having these without the necessary dockyards and fleet-repairing bases," he said, "would render the whole thing useless. He had been going to nickel shows and liked them much. He needed money to go to more, and at those which he had seen he gained the Meato burgle. He couldn't burgle the shows in the face of the eagle-eyed doormen, so he decided he would do his burgling elsewhere and cock the his burgling elsewhere and soak the spoils. His mind turned to the con-cern for which he had worked.

Tuesday night he entered the Harris premises by means of a little window under the front steps, removing a grating in true burgiar style. He secured about $1.25 worth of stamps. This shooting.

Shooting.

Friday Kenly was away in Ottawa at the funeral of a relative and only recomplete term, allowing for a full good down to work at 9 o'clock, and a few minutes after his body was found.

He was employed by the Ontario hour. Then he stealthily crept out. There wasn't any shaky music such as is provided for the stage burgler. but he could not help that. He found a pick and crowbar and went to work on the floor above the vault. He tore away the boards, but was confronted with a layer of tough cement, which would not give way before the blows of the pick. He decided upon a flank movement and went at the walls about the vault. But the walls were thick and he had to pick quietly for fear of arousing the workers above and below. He tried the other side and then gave up in despair.

But after a brief pondering he was again on the job. Securing a saw, for which he had to go upstairs, he strove to saw off the handle of the door. The metal was tough, tougher than either the saw or the child wonder of burglerdom. He had to give up.

Fire to Cover His Tracks.

Then he was frightened. He was fraid he would be discovered in getting out of the building, so he lighted a piece of paper at a gas jet and stole stealthily upstairs and ignited the pile stealthly upstairs and ignited the pile of papers on the deserted stairway. Then he made a silent exit thru the hoist door, and then it was that he was seen in the grounds. That is the tale which the 90-pound burglar told the 210-pound detective. Saturday he was arrested, charged with arson and two cases of shophrasking which is two cases of shopbreaking, which is going some at the age of 13 years and the weight of 90 pounds.
