HERMAN GIVEN DECISION OVER JIMMY WILDE

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Toronto, Jan. 13.—Coroner Dr. George W. Graham, this afternoon opened the official inquiry into the death of Miss Monica Kenney, and Mrs. E. Board, who died on Saturday, shortly after the administration of "neod arsenol." The body of Miss Kenney was examined this morning and brought to the city morgue, where Dr. W. L. Robertson, performed the post mortem examination. After being viewed by the jury, it was released for re-burial.

The inquest was adjourned until Thursday, Jan. 20, at 8 p.m. Coroner Graham told the jury one of the most important matters that would come out is the question of embargo against other blood treatments now excluded from Canada.

Laughter And Tears.

(LeBaron Cooke, in Contemporary Verse).

The laughter of my friends
Breaks over me
Like a joyous war,
Like a joyous war,
From the crevices of my soul;
Yet there are times
When I prefer the cry of pain
With its cascade of tears,
Making my being
Human with feeling.

Twenty-five Years of Wonders.

(Boston Transcript.)

It is recalled that twenty-five years ago there were only four automobiles in the United States. Buggy riding was still a popular sport among young people, and elderly women shuddered at the danger of being crushed under horses' hoofs at the street crossings. But it was the dawn of an era of wonders of which the automobile was one.

There was beginning to be much talk of the possibility that man might talk the secret of the birds and learn to fly, but sensible folk, with few exceptions, regarded the account given by J. T. "Twobridge" of Darius Green and his flying-machine as the last authoritative word to be heard on that subject.

Samuel Pierpont Langley, to be sure, was making the experiments which demonstrated the possibility of the flight of heavier-than-air machines, but they were attracting little attention save as material for the professional jesters of the period.

Across the sea, Marconi was planning to send messages through the air without the use of wires, but four years were to pass before he actually established communication across the English Channel. The submarine boat is not a new invention. King James I. of England in 1604, less than four years after the settlement of Plymouth, took a short trip under the Thames in a wonderful contrivance created by a Dutch inventor, Cornelis van Drebel. A submarine of Yankee design was used in an attempt to blow up British vessels in the harbor of New York during the Revolution. Robert Fulton, who built the first successful steamboat, tried to sell a submarine to Napoleon. He built the boat and demonstrated that it could be made to sink and to return to the surface. There were others who met with some degrees of success in attempts at submarine navigation, but twenty-five years ago Jules Verne had the distinction of having created the only really successful submarine and the Nautilus was successful only in the work of fiction, for he has found its way to the screen of the moving picture house. So the Spanish War was fought without submarines, airplanes or wireless. It was just twenty-five years ago that Thomas Alva Edison first used wax cylinders as part of his phonograph, and soon thereafter the American public was expressing astonishment at the wonders performed by instruments which reproduced words and music after the listener had stuck the ends of rubber tubes in his ears and the cylinder had been set in motion. The graphophone with whirling disc followed and then came the development which has given to nearly every family in the land the means of enjoyment through the reproduction of grand opera or jazz, according to taste. Mention of the wonders that have come to pass during the past quarter-century might be indefinitely prolonged. The "pictures," of course, should not be overlooked. While the automobile has been in process of transformation from a toy of the rich to a necessity of the multitude and has been made the centre of a great industry, the moving picture theatres have come to be numbered by the thousands, and the American public has long ago forgotten to wonder at the news that a man with funny feet received a salary twelve or fifteen times as large as that paid to the President of the United States. All in all, the world has moved in many and diverse ways since those far-off days when there were only four automobiles in the land and the man who talked of the possibility of flight in heavier-than-air machines was regarded as flighty in his mental processes.

"Strong Characters Never Noisy." (Orison Swift Marden in The New Success Magazine.)

The water in a little mountain stream dashing down over the rocks makes more noise than the mighty Mississippi River. The strongest characters are never noisy. They are balanced, poised, serene, like a great river. They do "their work quietly, efficiently, and never permit temper, passion, prejudice, whim or obstacle to disturb their serenity or turn them aside from their course. The world is looking for the poised, level-headed man, the man who can always be depended on, who won't fall down in an emergency or
