During the Summer months many people do not eat nearly as much meat as during the cooler and colder months. We are now entering upon that time of the year when good, clean, healthy meat is absolutely necessary if one wishes to be healthy and strong and able to bear the rigors of the severe climate conditions that will prevail.

When you want just what you want when you want it in the meats, the best way to get it is to Halifax, September 4th, 1913.

A Word Of Welcome.

By train and steamer, visitors are thronging to Halifax for Nova Scotia's Annual Exhibition.

Among these sight-seers are undoubtedly many who have dealt with this Investment House at one time or other during the past forty years in which it has been faithfully serving the public.

May we ask these good friends of ours to consider themselves heartily welcome at our offices in the ground floor of our Exchange Building, at the corner of Hollis and Prince Streets.

Every facility at our disposal will be made available for their convenience.
If at the same time information about financial matters is desired, we will be glad to be of service.
But of course no obligation is incurred—just a hearty welcome.

He turned and ran down the steps and stride away through the long shade of the garden. They heard the gate click after him as he passed into the Chabon grounds, and then they glanced at each other with such a glance as may pass between two members of a peace commission sitting on the same side of the table who will not admit to each other that the latest proposition of the enemy has been in the nature of a surprise. They did not, however, suffer themselves to watch Armitage, but diplomatically refused the glasses.

Through the green walls went Armitage. He had not been out of the baron's ground before since he was carried there from the longwood, and it was pleasant to be free once more and able to stir without a nurse at his heels, and he swung along with his head and shoulders erect, walking with the confident stride of a man who has no doubt whatever of his immortal life.

At the pergola he paused to reconsider, finding on the bench certain weight that interested him deeply—a parcel, a contrivance of stone, lace and pink rope that seemed to be a hat and a long magazine. He jumped upon the bench where once he had sat as a child, a refugee, a person discussed in disagreeable terms by the newspapers, and studied the landscape.
Then he went on up the gradual slope of the meadow until he came to the pasture wall. It was under the trees beneath which Oscar had waited for Zinat that he found her.

"You told me you wouldn't dare venture out for a week," he said, advancing toward him and giving him her hand.

"That was what they told me," he said, laughing, "but I escaped from my keepers."

"You will undoubtedly take cold without your hat!"

"Yes! I shall undoubtedly have pneumonia from exposure to the Virginia sunshine. I take my chances."

"You're all out of the wall for three minutes, then you must go back. I cannot be responsible for the life of a wounded hero."

"Gossip!" He held up his hand.
"That's what I came to talk to you about."

"About being a hero? You have taken an unfair advantage. I was going to send for the latest edition in Laurel wreaths tomorrow."

She set down beside him on the wall.
The sheep were a grayish blur against the green. A little negro boy was shepherding them, and they scampered before him toward the farther end of the pasture. The faint and vanishing tinkle of a bell and the boy's whistle were emphasis to the cover guide of the late afternoon. They spoke rapidly and impersonally of his adventures in the hills and of his illness.

"I don't know, Miss Chabon, that I was going to lose my mind that morning at the bungalow or I should have told your brother to conduct you to the conservatory while I waited. From what they told me I must have been a little light-headed for a day or two.
I had been in my right mind I should not have let Captain Dick mix up in my business and run the risk of getting killed in a nasty little row. Dear old Dick! I made a mess of that whole business. I ought to have telegraphed for the Storm Springs constable in the beginning and told him that 'he wasn't careful the noble house of Schomburg would rot and fall.'"

"Yes, and just letting the effect on our constable of telling him that the fate of an empire lay in his hands. It's hard enough to get a man arrested who bores his horse. But you must go back to your keepers. You haven't your hat—"

"Neither have you. You shan't outdo me in recklessness. I inspected your hat as I came through the pergola. I liked it immensely. I came near setting it as a spoil of war—the loot of the pergola."

"There would be cause for another row. I am really tired, my hat is so much. But the baron will be after you in a moment. I can't be responsible for you."

"The baron annoys me. He has given me a lot of worry. And that's what I have come to ask you about."

"Then I should say that you oughtn't to quarrel with a dear old man like Baron von Marhof. Besides, he's your uncle!"

"No, not I don't want him to be my uncle! I don't need any uncle!"

He glanced about with an anxiety that made her laugh. "My father told me that the events of April in these hills were not to be mentioned.
But don't worry. The sheep won't tell —and I won't."

He was silent for a moment as he thought out the words of what he wished to say to her. The sun was dipping down into the hills; the wet air was still; the voice of a negro singing as he crossed a distant field stole sweetly upon them.

"Shirley!"

He touched her hand.

"Shirley!" And his fingers closed upon hers.

"I love you, Shirley! From those days when I saw you in Paris before the great Gettysburg battle picture I loved you. You had left the cry of the old world, the story that is in its battleside, its beauty and romance, just as I had left the call of this new and more wonderful world. I understood—I understood that I was in your heart. I knew what those things meant to you, but I had put them aside. I had chosen another life for myself. And the poor fire that you moved that is yours if you will take it. I have told your father and Baron von Marhof that I would not take the fortune my father left me. I would not go back there to be thanked or to get a ribbon to wear in my coat. But my name, the name born as a boy and degraded in my
