

CHAPTER VII

THE CHINESE

The Chinese people are the most numerous in the world, and their civilization is one of the most ancient. They are a very different race from the Europeans, and their customs and manners are very different. They are very industrious and very intelligent, and they have made great progress in science and art. They are very fond of their country, and they are very loyal to their rulers. They are very brave and very courageous, and they are very generous and very kind. They are very different from the Europeans, and they are very interesting to study.