Bridge

Fred Karpin

It was the late W. Somerset Maugham who once stated: "If I had my way, I would have children taught bridge as a matter of course, just as they are taught dancing. In the end, it will be more useful to them. In fact, when all else fails — sports, love, ambition — bridge remains a solace and an entertainment."

In concretization of Maugham's statement, take the case of John Simon, of St. Louis. A year ago, at the age of 75, Simon won the National Men's Team-of-Four Championship. In so doing, he became the oldest man ever to capture this prized event. And this year, at the National Championships of 1973, he broke his own record: at the age of 76, he once again won the Men's Team Championship. When interviewed shortly after his 1973 win, Simon commented: "I don't know whether my youth was missed, but if it was, I've sure made up for it. This win gave me more satisfaction than any other competitive endeavor in either business or sports."

Here is one of the deals that contributed to Simon's victory in the 1973 event. He was sitting in the West seat. Had Simon led any suit but spades, declarer would have made all 13 tricks: he would have discarded his two spades on dummy's ace and king of diamonds; and with the club finesse being successful, this suit would have brought home without the loss of a trick. Had Simon opened the ace of spades, that would have been the defenders' only trick.

But he happened to get his fingers on the deuce of spades. Declarer, not naturally, assumed that Simon was not underleading an ace against a slam contract, so he staked his destiny on the hope that the lead was away from the queen. So he inserted the board's jack, hoping it would be captured by East's (presumed) ace.

As is evident, East captured the trick with the queen. He then made haste to play back a spade, and Simon's ace took the setting trick.

Transportation study

Mississauga is initiating a $250,000 transportation planning study to start in June.

The town has hired a consulting firm, Kates, Peat, Marwick and Co., to study transportation needs.

The short-term aspects of the study will be a five-year proposal, taking into account the impact of current development.

The study's objective also is "to produce a transportation system which will not only provide efficient service, but will also preserve and enhance the quality of environment and the distinctive features of the natural landscape," says town transportation planning engineer Abdul Rashid.
