assure you that no friendlier visitor ever came to that part of Canada.

In Quebec City during the great Allied Conference there, in that beautiful setting of the old Citadel and the Chateau Frontenac, Canada played host, through its Prime Minister Mackenzie King, to President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill, together with several of the highest ranking members of their respective Governments, and with many of their highest ranking advisers - Military, Naval, Air, and State.

I need not dwell on the glittering assemblage which met in Quebec City during that great Allied Conference. We are every day seeing the successful results in the conduct of the war.

Following the Quebec meeting thousands of Canadians were able to see the President of the United States in Ottawa, when he, on August 25th, paid that friendly visit to our Capital.

What is the result of all this interchange? Do you believe that it resulted, as some would have it, in lack of knowledge, lack of understanding, or any such poppycock, on the part of the two peoples who had seen so much of each other and of each other's country?

Unfortunately, the exigencies of the foreign exchange situation, and the necessary curtailment of travel during wartime, in order that munitions and men for the war might move more freely, have prevented many of you from visiting the United States of late, and likewise have prevented many citizens of the United States from visiting Canada.

The war changed many things, as wars will do. The existing relations between Canada and the United States at the time of <sup>the</sup> Pearl Harbor attack were to develop in the ensuing months an amazing international co-operation, the extent of which is not fully grasped by many people on either side of the border.

Canada, pressed by the needs of war, eager to
