THE SITUATION.

There is a comparative halt in the fighting on the Western front. The Allies continue to hold all that they had previously gained and while some military critics think that the retiring movement of the Huns has not yet ended, others in- erations of American citizens may cline to the belief that the foe is busy in the establishment of a solid front. If so a big battle to the north is quite likely to occur. hy the International Institute of Berlin still continues to give out Agriculture it appears that Canalying reports with regard to the re- dians are the greatest bread eaters sults of the Allied counter-attack. in the world with the sole exception These falsifications in themselves of the Danes.
