The English "Society for the Prevention of Consumption," presided over by the Prince of Wales, was readdressed by Sir William Broadbent, who stated that it was definitely known that every case of consumption began with a germ communicated from some other case. There is no such thing as inherited consumption. There may be local weakness which tends to consumption, but the germ has absolutely to be planted in that weak spot before consumption can en-sue. This ought to comfort thousands of people who have "weak chests" or weak lungs." They are not force dained victims of this dread disease. All that is needed to bid absolute deliance to this deadly scourge, is to be able to strengthen the weak lungs and build up a strong body. answer to this need is found in Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It purifies the blood and increases the blood supply, that disease is thrown off, and the weak organs are nourish ed into perfect health, which defies germs of every kind. People, given up by doctors, emaciated, bleeding of the lungs, with obstinate, lingering coughs, are being cured every day by the use of "Golden Medical Discov-ery." Then, as some of the more important officers of the army or navy, members of congress or of the executive departments chanced to pass in the line, the president would gravely introduce his young assistant, with whom they were required to shake hands as well as with himself.

When the reception was over, President Lincoln took the boy into his private apartments and introduced him to Mrs. Lincoln. After entertaining him at luncheon he dismissed him with a brief note to the commanding officer of the hospital where he was then stationed telling why the boy's leave of absence had been extended.

ried and irritable advisers.

On one occasion a sergeant had a squad of men at work unloading supplies from an Ohio river steamboat that in some mysterious manner had made its way from the interior to the coast waters of Virginia. It was a flat bottomed boat, drawing not more than three feet of water when loaded and hardly dampening its plank bottom when light. It was propelled by a horizontal stern wheel, driven by a small upright engine. Boats of that type were common on the Ohio, which runs almost dry at some seasons. They were known as "Pittsburgers" and were fabled to navigate freely in a

President Lincoln repeated this extravagant story without the ghost of a smile. During its recital Secretary Stanton and Generals Halleck and Sherman—the last named having run up the day before from his march through the Carolinas-who were with the party, had approached the president. EASTERN BEEF CATTLE It Will Pay Best to Market Boat of

The recent "fluctuations" in beef show that the farmer performs a very important part in influencing the supply, and that he has the power to reply, and that he has the power to reduce or increase prices more than has heretofore been supposed. Looking over the field the fact appears also that the prices of beef and the control of the present supply are regulated at Kansas City, over 1,700 miles from the seaboard. The Eastern farmer is compelled to abandon the cattle business because he cannot compete with his Western competitors, and our butchers are forced to buy from those who seem to have power to limit the supply. Now, the real party who can regulate the prices is the farmer. There is no necessity whatever for the East buying her beef so far from home. It is the farmers in this section who have refused to turn their attention to cattle raisin and who are permitting the Western farmers to have control of the leading markets. The very fact that beef is high is proof that the farmers are depriving themselves of the opportunity of receiving better prices for their products than they have been securing.

The dairy interests of the East keep the production of beef cattle in the Yet, with the complaint that prices for grain prevent farmers making a profit, no attention has been given to the fattening of steers. One of the drawbacks has been that the steers on the majority of the Eastern farms are very inferior, due to the fact that the best milch cows are not pro flucers of the choicest beef animals. This condition will remain, however, unless farmers are willing to raise their calves instead of selling them of at an early age. A pure-bred bull of the beef-producing breeds, such as the Herefords, Shorthorns, or Polled An-gus, bred to th ordinary dairy cows, will make a wonderful improvement in the stock, though A is admitted that nothing will be gained by keeping the helfer calves of such union unless it is to send them to market, as suitable 'r milk and butter as the breeds adapted for those purposes.

With wheat as low as fifty cents. the prices of corn and oats will be inauenced correspondingly, and the best way to sell cheap grain is in the form of meat. There is nothing to preven those who are nearest to the markets from controlling prices, but in order to do so the beef must be fully up in quality to that which comes from the West. It is admitted that the best beef is shipped from west of the Mississippi, for the reason that our East ern farmers are more interested in milk and butter than in beef, hence the greater uniformity of the Western meat, but present prices demonstrate that our Eastern farmers can afford to use their cheap grain for producing beef. To be successful, however, the cattle must be of the breeds that will give the greatest gain in the shortest time, and the beef must be of a quality to compete with that which comes from elsewhere. With transportation in our favor all now depends upon the breeds, and with their use the East need not fear Western competi-

The value of trees for their shelter is important, and it has been estimated that if one-fourth of the fields devoted to cultivation were planted with trees properly distributed, the other three-fourths would produce as much as the whole, besides, the timber and fuel would be clear gain. Trees planted are more between render, them no longer than the contract of th fuel would be clear gain. Trees planted near marshes render them no longer noxious to people living near them. Where the proportion of one-fourth of the land in timber, the other three-fourths in cultivation, is not maintained, it is only a question of time when the effect will be noticed. The effect upon the climate is of a local character, and this local modification is of great imperiance.
