BY ROSE A BRAENDLE. Written for the Catholic Mirror.

They are going, going, going, Hear the patter of their feet, The sweet voiced little children, Hear them march along the street They are going, going, going, The Matron and the Maid;

They tread the shady glade and road In sunshine and in shade. They are going, going, going, The workman and the King; Each to his destination, With head and hands to bring.

The fruits of mind and labor, The sweat of brain and brawn, Very few of them permitted, To be simply lookers on.

The Cardinal with the mitre, The Bishop with the "crook," The monk with beads and scapular, The priest with bell and book. They are going, going, going,

Hear the tread of martial feet; The generals and the soldiers, Are marching down the street The fifes and drums are going,

The bugler marches on; They are going, going, going, Their life-blood's going, going,

And their dreams of glory fled They are going, going, going, To lie beside the dead.
