The butter was placed shortly afterwards in the hands of commission merchants in Buffalo for sale, but they were unable to sell any considerable quantity of it at first class prices, and were compelled to take very inferior prices for most of it. The price agreed to be paid by defendant for the butter was 22 cents, and it appears defendant paid plaintiff all the money he got from the commission merchants; but after doing so, he still owed plaintiff $228.20, to recover which this action was brought. The defendant's theory was that plaintiff represented the butter as "first class," but plaintiff contended that he only said "that it would average a first class lot." The jury found that plaintiff warranted the butter only "to be a good fair quality of Canadian butter," and on their findings the judge entered a verdict for plaintff seduction of the plaintiff's daughter, Zillah. It appeared by the evidence that the plaintiff's daughter, was in the year 1881, a domestic servant in the house of the defendant's mother, where the alleged illicit intercourse took place according to plaintiff's witnesses.
