a home for you, and shelter you from the dangers of the world." but he was stern to the momentary impulse. He had no home to offer her. Years might elapse before he could be in a position to guard her as he wished to do. Besides, he had no reason to suppose that she cared for him, he had scarcely realized that he cared for her, until he saw her again; and then he knew that the boyish fancy of his youth had never died away, and that he had never seen, never was likely to see, another woman whom he loved or wished to make his wife. It was time, he felt, to turn the con versation into more ordinary channels. He made a remark about the beauty of the country in which Redwood Hall was situ ated, and Marjory responded with effusion. "I hadn't remembered that it was so beautiful," she said. "These wide Surrey views, with the blue-purple hills in the distance, are perfectly charming." "My uncle has a good eye for them," said. Felix. "Do you see those long vistas in the woods round the house? It is he who has had them cut in that way, in avenues, as it were, so that you see the sunset and years ago the trees round the house shut out every bit of view." "Mr. Hyde has good taste," said Mar-

"Yes, he has very good taste," said Felix, gravely, but as the eyes of the two young people met, neither of them could restrain a smile. He is extremely kind," said Marjory, after a moment's pause, and with a gravity which Felix felt was meant to be almost a rebuke.

"Oh, yes," Felix agreed with her, "he is kind enough," but there was something in his accent which did not please the

"I am very grateful to Mr. Hyde," she said in a rather more distant tone, "for ai that he has done for me, and one of the best things he did was to send me to Mrs. Bullen's before I went to Germany, and persuade her to take charge of me sometimes in the holidays. And now it is so nice that he has married her, and lets me come to see her sometimes. Oh, but I forgot, perhaps you don't like it as well?"- with a questioning look. "On the contrary," said Felix. "I an extremely pleased that he has made such a good choice, and that it gives us the opportunity of seeing more of you."

"Oh, but I shall not be here often," said the girl lightly. "I am much too busy to en, Ted. Parnell, James Penny, Helen Pethick, Percy Read, Charlie Smith, spend much of my time in a quiet little ountry village, you know."

He thought the home should not give over wholly the training of its youth in religious matters to the Sunday school, but should lay the foundation of purity of character in childhood, and should be further interested to develop true character all the way up, giving the Sunday school the needed encouragement of their presence that the children may think it is indeed something worth

Rev. N. Lindsay, Presbyterian, Ivan, followed on the "Supreme Object of Sunday School Work." He said it was not to impart a knowledge of the Bible. That was good, but not the Nor was it to encompass conversion. Important, but not the most. Nor to lead them to confess Christ; that is only one step. The supreme object should be the salvation of souls. It must be a continued, a progressing work, as only "he that endureth to the end shall be saved." It is a continued O women who love us, we beg and beseech salvation from sin, or, in other words, as has been already said here to-day, which place all our chattels so far out of the formation of character. This emthe formation of character. This embraces our duty in all moral obligations-to be honest, true, just, kind, pure, loving, in fact, to be like Christ. You must be and do what you want your scholars to be and do. You must have the spirit of the great Teacher. "Who," you ask, "is sufficient for these things?" Listen:—Our sufficiency is of the Lord. It is man's privilege to be a fellow-worker with God, to co-operate with Him, to feel God's Spirit working within, to be full of the Holy Ghost and attain to the measure of fullness of stature in Christ.
