A Fort Qu'Appelle despatch says :- Eleazer Montgrand, a fri nilly ball-breed, who las worked on the old trail to Prince Albert for many very as a teamster, has arrived at Fort Qu'Appe le from Clark's crossing. He confirms the previous report that the Indians north of the South Saskatchewan are uneasy, Beardy, One Arrow, Okemasis and other leading men smoked with Rel's agents before the fight on Bardy's reserve at Duck Lake. Montgrand gives an authentie account

Major Cr. zier in ended to secure the sunplies in Stobart, Eden & Co's store at Duck for Mr. Chaffee, who tas charge of the Indian farm near Duck Lake. The rebel . 220 strong, nuder F' Dumont, brother of Dumont the ferryman at Dumont's crossing had, however, raided these stores before Cozier's arrival. Crozier came upon Dumont's force on Beardy's reserve, and collect to them to surrender. His men, getting the word of command, pointed their rifles at the rebels, who were standing on the edge of a small

McCormick, up his hand, and the police and volunteers extended their ranks. Both parted almost together. The first tire from the half-breeds appeared to be directed at Crozier's left, where the Prince Albert wolun eers were stationed, and eight of them fell. The police replied with great vicor, but the men then shouted to Crozier that they could not see president is steadily moving troops toward the rebels. After the second volley from the half-breeds Cr. zier's force began to withdraw, carrying with them the dead and wounded. It was snowing The police are said to have had two connon; but Montgrand's informant, who saw the fight, save he did see them nor hear any caunon report. When the police began to retreat, Dumout's men clambered to the top of the ravine and fired once or twice again; but they did not attempt to follow Cozier, who struck out for Carlton. Beardy is said to have made a bargain with Damont that Crozier should not be killed, the chief being a friend of his. Montgrand's informant says that not more than twenty half-break fired. The rest suspected that Irvine was near, and held the other side of the ravine, When they saw no signs of another force most of them ran back to their comrades, but by this time the police were falling back. One half-breed was wounded in the shoulder from a ricochet : none killed. Bearily, with a number away with a much tock work, which to M. Mead a lawyer, holds thirty-two notes of braves, was a mile away, looking for the approach of Irvine or of some other body of police, Dumont, as alealy said, being of opinion that Crozier was making play with his front to give time for another detachment to strike the rebel read
