

THE SAVIOUR OF LIAO-WANG

TOLD BY MR. H. J. WHIGHAM

War Correspondent

"I CAN tell you a story that no man actually saw, for it is the tale of a white man doing a fine thing alone."

Mr. Whigham went through the Cuban War, earned fame throughout the Empire by his brilliant letters to The Morning Post during the South African War, and by his work The Persian Problem. He is a man who has travelled all over the world, dwelt long in the remote places of the earth, and has acquired a wide knowledge of the East.

"It happened when I was in China, just after the Boxers had torn up the Manchurian Railway, and were playing hanky-panky with law and order. The Russians had to stop this sort of thing, and they did it in their usual fashion by marching from city to city, destroying and looting as they went. On these expeditions they generally got a Protestant missionary to go with them—in most cases a Scotchman or an Englishman—to act as interpreters.

"The missionaries for their part were glad enough
