
TO
THE RIGHT HONOURABLE
EDMUND BURKE.

SIR,

THOUGH personally a stranger and unknown to you, I shall not make you any apology for this address. You have publicly avowed, in your "LETTER TO A NOBLE LORD," receiving a pension of a very enormous amount; and with that modest assurance which has uniformly attended you from the first outset of your political career, you have pleaded at the bar of the public, that the services you have rendered this "your adopted country," as you are pleased to term it, well merit not only that remuneration, but even much more. As every individual in this ill-starred country is in some degree more or less interested in your pension, as forming a gross article

B