tion, said he believed this anxiety was due to insufficient knowledge of the steps taken to protect the country from anything like alien danger.

The home secretary said it was true that there was anxiety even among thoughtful and reasonable men as to what might be the effect of so large a number of aliens in England, and it was the duty of the government to take all reasonable steps for the safety of the country.

Such outrages as the sinking of hospital ships, Sir George said, must affect the point of view from which the question was approached. If the enemy permitted acts of that kind enemy subjects must suffer in the estimate which all decent people formed of them.

The government proposed, he said, it ask committees in each country to the safe to insufficient knowledge of the case of a British setback when he did not get numerous letters written by Germans in Britain crowing over it. These letters bore a British postmark and obviously were written by Germans. That sort of thing must be stopped.

"In time of war," he said in conclusion, "we must give the benefit of the doubt to our own country. The risks are far too great for enemy aliens not to be searched out ruthlessly, even to the point of individual hardships. The only limit to be placed upon it is that we should not enter into competition with the Germans. That would be degrading our flag. But at the same time do not let us commit the folly of overtrustfulness to the extent of endangering the country we love so well."
