and nothing we can say will be half as effective as making your own comparisons.

The Dineen label in a hat is a guarantee as to quality.

FOOLISH WAYS OF MEN.

They are queer creatures, and with many useless habits.

Ever watched a man as he takes a chair? He'll move it—every time—even if it's only an inch.

Men are queer creatures, as every one knows, comments a writer in the Pall Mall Express.

Few men open their personal correspondence without looking at the postmarks to see the time of posting.

When a man puts on his hat he almost always looks inside it first.

He subjects the point of his pen to the same careful scrutiny before commencing to write a letter.

It is the man who reads with his back to the light, holding his book in one hand.

THE INDISPENSABLE MAN.

A Mild but Needed and Timely Lay Sermon. From The Detroit Free Press.

Let no man fall into the dear delusion that he is an indispensable part of this world's machinery.

How much he may overestimate his importance, it is yet probable, at least possible, that he has a definite, if elastic, value; but let him drop out of the whirl, having still breath enough to last him while he surveys the situation, and he will find that the wheeling goes on, turning in the old familiar way.

You have been planning, twisting, turning and playing the game from every angle in order to be present on that fortnight's vacation without the leaden consciousness that the ship in which you may be supercargo must go to the bottom unless you are on board.

You have surveyed all the possibilities of disaster because of your absence from your post and made provision against them, so far as human foresight can avail.

Arrangements for keeping in momentary touch with your business are completed and you finally get off.

The days go by. You are in fear-some expectancy every minute. The swaying motion and planned rest awakes itself into active worry lest the awful thing you feared has actually come to pass, and the dismayed associates who have not been able to summon courage enough to inform you of it.

Those hours in the shade of Burgundy, but there is a good deal of news to which was added disquieting crop news from Russia and selling by English buyers.

Long nights of unbroken sleep that you had planned; the insistent breakfast appetite of which you had dreamed; the renewing of acquaintance with the brook and the pond of your boyhood; the re-remembering of the dear ties of long severed and forever remembered; the visits to spots enlured by early association and made yet more precious by long and arduous sojourn.

It is not the places you had made for them because of your fears that the business at home was going awry.
