HENRY ARNOLDT ACQUITTED.

Berlin, May 28.—Henry Arnoldt, who on Tuesday, was arrested in Toronto by Detective Burrows on a charge of stealing a carload of scrap iron from John Lewis here, was brought before Police Magistrate Weir this morning, and was committed for trial. His trial commenced before Judge Chisholm at 2 o'clock p.m. W. H. Bowlby, K. C., appeared for the Crown, and Nicholas Murphy, K. C., of Toronto, for the defence. Arnoldt testified on his own behalf, and said the carload was worth $150. He produced vouchers to support his contention that it was bought with his own money and that Lewis had no interest in the goods whatever. After hearing his story, Judge Chisholm ordered Arnoldt's discharge and the handing over to him of his bill of lading.

New Orleans, May 28.—Dr. B. M. Palmer died this afternoon at 12.50 o'clock, never having recovered from the complete state of coma into which he entered yesterday morning. The venerable divine was run dwn on the afternoon of Monday, May 5, by a Carrollton-avenue street car, and dragged fully a block. His right great toe was cut off, and injuries were inflicted on the forehead, and his right leg was broken in two places, just above the ankle.

BRITAIN'S PLACE ASSURED

Lord Brassey in His Address as President of London Chamber of Commerce Speaks of Morgan.

MORE LIBERAL SUBSIDIES FOR MAILS

Considers That an Imperial Customs Union is Desirable, The Difficult to Achieve.

London, May 28.—The annual meeting of the London Chamber of Commerce, which was to have been held this afternoon, was unexpectedly and rather excitedly adjourned, owing to lack of space and air. Hundreds of business men and merchants crowded into the small room provided for the meeting, until they had to stand on the stairs, and some of them were even unable to get any further than the street. When Lord Brassey, who presided, attempted to open the meeting, he was greeted with ominous demands for adjournment from the sweltering half-stifled audience, whose outcries were finally acceded to.

In the meanwhile, printed copies of the presidential address which Lord Brassey intended to deliver were distributed. In this document His Lordship urged the improvement of the London docks, on the lines of those at New York and at Hamburg, and said he believed the British on even terms were well able to hold their own in industrial struggles, proof of which, he asserted, was furnished by the fact that the exports per head of Great Britain were nearly double those of the United States.

Dealing with the shipping combine, Lord Brassey said it was idle to expect or claim a monopoly of the North Atlantic. It was certain, sooner or later, that some movement similar to that initiated by J. P. Morgan would be brought about by the United States.

"Let us not lose our national dignity in unavailing and groundless alarms," the address continued. "Our position as a maritime nation is assured beyond the reach of competition, and we shall hold our position against all comers, because we build ships more cheaply, and, with or without foreign crews, sail them more cheaply than any of our rivals."

Lord Brassey admitted, however, that the British shipbuilders must look to their laurels in the construction of ocean greyhounds of the type of the Hamburg-American Line steamer Deutschland, and he urged more liberal subsidies for mail carrying. He concluded with referring to the desirability of an imperial customs union (tho His Lordship pointed out its great difficulties of execution), and touched upon the increasing friendship between Great Britain and the United States.

COL. PELLATT HONORED

On Eve of His Departure for the Coronation.

Lieut.-Col. Pellatt, who will command the Coronation Contingent, was tendered a farewell banquet at the Albany Club last night by the officers of the Queen's Own Rifles. Major Murray presided. The only toasts honored were those of "The King," "The Officers of the Regiment" and "The Guests." Lieut.-Col. Pellatt leaves Toronto to-morrow night for Point Levis, to take command of the contingent, the departure of which from Quebec is booked for 7 o'clock on the evening of June 7.

A National Funeral.

Washington, May 28.—The remains of the late Lord Pauncefote, British ambassador to Washington, to-day were accorded a national funeral, in token of the high esteem set by the American people on the personal worth of the deceased, and an acknowledgment of the friendly feeling which is cherished towards Great Britain. Every department of the national government was represented.

STOCK IN THE WEST.

Well Bred Cattle and Horses Going to the Prairie Province.

Calgary, May 28.—The recent meeting of the Territorial Stock Association at Calgary was one of the best shows, with the argest sales of thoroughbred stock ever held in the Dominion. Stockmen attended in large numbers and from all parts of the Territories—stock farmers from Eastern Assiniboia and cattle men from the large ranches of Southern Alberta.

The C.P.R. ship pure-bred horses and cattle at very low rates, to encourage the importation of the very best class of stock, and on this occasion all thoroughbred stock was shipped free of charge.

All classes of cattle were exhibited, including Herefords, Durhams, etc.; but the favorites with the Western ranchers are the Shorthorns, as they are found to do well on the range and make the best beef—beef cattle being naturally preferred to dairy animals in a ranching country.

Horses were well represented, both heavy and light, many fine animals being exhibited. Horse ranchers expect great things from Col. Dent's visits to this country, and the price of saddle horses is very high.

It is thought that he will have to be a little less particular than last year, as horses are even scarcer now than on his last visit.

The visiting stockmen attended a large banquet, at which many representative men spoke. The progress of the ranching industry was discussed, contrasting the haphazard ways of the early days and disastrous results with the more business-like methods of today.

Twelve or fifteen years ago, when the country was very sparsely settled, it was the custom for men starting ranching to brand their cattle, turn them loose, and let them wander where they would on the bald-headed prairie, providing no hay for their use in winter, and trusting to getting them on the annual round-up. Those were halcyon days for the "cattle rustlers," ever on the alert to pick up a few head which would hardly be missed from the big herds. Then the percentage that died thru the winter and in various ways from lack of attention was considerable. So that when the round-up did gather up a herd and cut out the different brands, the rancher-man's bunch had almost faded away.

One young Englishman of aristocratic family came west in the early days and got a position as chore boy on a large ranch. His fond parents hoped to see him some day a great cattle king, but his highest ambition was to wear fringed shapps, pack a gun, and ride a bucking broncho with the cowboys on the range. The boss sent him to town one day to get some cattle, but during the long ride he got his instructions mixed and told the seller that he couldn't remember if it was eleven two-year-olds or two eleven-year-olds that he wanted, doncherknow. He could never make out why they fired him.

Times have changed nowadays and ranchmen take more individual care of cattle than formerly, when feeding was thought unnecessary. The big ranching companies with their large herds were once practically the only parties engaged in the cattle business, but the settling up of the country has forced many of the companies to sell out, and the bunches of cattle are consequently much smaller and more numerous.

Scrub cattle are very numerous on the range, but it has been shown that the improvement of stock, far from being an expensive pastime, is really money in the pockets of the owners of the pure-bred animals, as they are in every way superior, and that as beef they bring a much higher figure than "scrub" cattle.

Two Queen Mothers.

The despatches of the past two weeks have brought into special prominence the two women in Europe who for about the same length of time—sixteen or seventeen years—filled the onerous position of Queen Regent, or acting Queen—Emma of Holland and Maria Christina of Spain. Each of these women, if report be true, found little peace or happiness in marriage and each was left to early widowhood with an infant child, which, in addition to the usual responsibilities, carried that of being the future ruler of a nation. The wisdom, the dignity and the tenderness with which these two royal mothers have fulfilled their important duties are universally recognized. Not only have they reared these children to the entire satisfaction of their people, but they have at the same time ably discharged all the functions of a sovereign, thus clearly demonstrating that there is not the slightest incompatibity between the two vocations—that a woman may be a political ruler without its interfering in the smallest degree with her being an efficient mother.

Few sovereigns ever have reigned under more trying conditions than have surrounded the Queen mother of Spain, persecuted by foes within and without her household, trembling on the brink of a revolution, for which she was in no wise responsible and harassed by a war which she was powerless to avert. All these she bore for the sake of her child, and her courage, her judgment, her loyalty and her firmness have won the respect even of her enemies. Now she comes in a large measure to the parting of the ways with her beloved son whom she has so carefully reared to be King of his nation, and still, with the mother's loving devotion, she resigns the government into his young hands and willingly accepts for herself a subordinate place.

Wise Words.

The friends that wealth makes are as the quicksands, but the friends of poverty are like the fixed stars in heaven.

A wife's wise counselling entereth her husband's mind, and after many days returneth to her in jeyels and precious raiment, says The Philadelphia Inquirer.

The idler that dreameth of gold suffereth hunger, but he who hath dug for it liveth in a palace.

The heart of a woman is as a driven well, and he would sound its depths must be blessed in patience, even like one who dives for pearls.

It were safer to place your mouth on the muzzle of a gun than on the lips of a deceitful woman.

Sometimes we envy the prosperity of a wicked man, little knowing how the wicked man envies us.

It were better to be kicked by your friend than kissed by your enemy.

'Twere better to see clearly with one eye than mistily with two.

Every man ought to make a certain allowance for his wife.

Plain duties become beautiful thru their performance.

They say love is blind, but a woman can see a thousand qualities in a man he never possesses.

A woman would be willing to die for the man she loves, but she couldn't keep from saying "I told you so," for the very life of her.

Stage Sayings.

A woman never blames a mirror for casting reflections on her.

Not what she wears, but how she wears it, gives a woman individuality.

One of the best ways of self-improvement is being of service to others who need help.

A woman ought to show the same desire for her husband's approval after she is married as before.

The girl who will spend half a day on the links wielding golf sticks won't touch a broom for fear it will "harden her hands."

A woman, no matter how broad-minded she may be, always rejoices that her waist is not in touch with her mental capacity, says The Pittsburg Dispatch.

After a woman reaches the age of 30 she takes especial interest in all articles citing the fascination of heroines in history who were 40 or over.

It is distressing to note at weddings that the women who do most of the weeping are the married ones. It has a wonderfully suggestive look.

A great deal is said of the trials of Job, but his wife, who had to put up with him while he was sick, deserves more credit.

Don't brood over the past nor dream of the future, but seize the instant and get your lesson from the hour.

To be able to bear provocation is a proof of great wisdom, and to forgive it is a proof of a great mind.

Strong impulses are but another name for energy. Energy may be turned to bad uses; but more good may always be made of an energetic nature than of an indolent and impassive one.

The good or evil we confer on others often recoils on ourselves.

A WOOLLY SUBJECT

Mary had a little lamb,
Its fleece was white as snow,
And everywhere that Mary went
That lamb was sure to go.

It followed her to school one day,
And when Mary wasn't looking
A farmer swiped it on the way
And soon that lamb was cooking.

Now, if Mary hadn't loved that lamb,
But had lammed her love instead,
That chestnut poem wouldn't exist,
And you would not have read—

So much about wool—all wool—free wool—Australian wool—lamb's wool—cheap wool—dear wool—wool wool. You can read enough about wool in any one newspaper to write a whole book full of poems. But it pays to study this wool question just the same. We intend to make a week of it in our children's department this week. We intend to show you just how cheap you can buy all-wool suits for your youngsters. We intend to show you just how much wool you can get in a cheap suit and how much cotton there is in the cheapest suits.

DROWNED IN THE HUMBER

Charles Mann and Two Companions Were Out in a Canoe When It Upset.

SANK 25 FEET FROM THE SHORE

Howard Graham Went After Mann Three Times and Then Fell Insensible on the Shore.

Charles Mann son of James T. Mann, chief clerk of the Department of Asylums, Parliament Buildings, was drowned yesterday afternoon at the second bend in the Humber River. The body was recovered and taken to the late home of the deceased at 161 St. Patrick-street. Charles Mann was 26 years of age, and is survived by his parents, two brothers—Harry, with George J. Foy & Co., and Stanley, with Aemilius Jarvis & Co. Hhe also leaves a married sister. Coroner J. H. McConnell investigated the sad circumstances surrounding the drowning, and deemed an inquest unnecessary. At great risk to his own life, Howard Graham of 306 Dovercourt-road made three unsuccessful attempts to rescue Mann from a watery grave.

Yesterday morning, Graham met Frank Hopkirk, a traveler from Missouri, in a business establishment, and planned a trip to the Humber, to spend the afternoon. Graham and Hopkirk met about 2.30 o'clock, and Mann, who was with the latter, was asked to accompany them. The party boarded the street car and went direct to Maw's boathouse on the Humber, where Graham keeps his canoe. The three paddled up the river to the old mill, and were on their way back when the fatality occurred. The canoe was in the middle of the river, and a sudden lurch caused it to dip and half fill with water. Mann, who was kneeling in the bow, and Hopkirk, in the stern, thinking that the canoe would sink, decided to swim for the shore. Their attempts to get out threw all three into the water. Graham and Hopkirk, on reaching the shore safely, saw Mann struggling in the water close to the upturned canoe, and 25 feet from the shore. Just before he sank for the last time, Graham told Hopkirk to go to Charles Nurse's Hotel for assistance, and then dived into the water with his clothes on. Thrice he tried to reach Mann, the third time the drowning man grabbing him by the foot. Believing that he was becoming exhausted, Graham, with great difficulty swam back to the shore, where he fell unconscious. Frank Reeve and his wife, who live nearby, and who heard the men's cries, arrived in time to resuscitate Graham. They carried him to their home, where he soon revived. In the meantime, Charles Nurse arrived with grappling irons, and the body was recovered in a short time. The remains were taken to Nurse's Hotel, where they were claimed by the father of the deceased. Charles Mann was a brother of Frederick Mann, the accountant, who was found drowned at the foot of West Market-street about a month ago. He was employed at one time at Michie's, but, from July, 1901, to Feb., 1902, he worked at Thomas' Hotel. It was his intention had he lived, to assume the duties of cashier at the King's Royal Hotel, Owen Sound, commencing on Monday next.

A Brave and Gallant Boer,

From an Australian paper.

One night Colonel Wing went out with a party of Hussars and Westralians. Early next morning two Boers were sighted, and several of the Westralians with a veterinary officer of the Hussars followed in pursuit. One of the Boers was shot, but the other raced on, and when the foremost of his pursuers drew up on him the Boer turned and shot him in the arm with a Mauser pistol. Then another Westralian gained on him. This time he dismounted, took careful aim, and the Australian dropped dead. The veterinary officer then galloped alongside him, but, being quite unarmed, could do nothing—"I thought I might be able to pull him off," he afterwards told me—and the Boer, again firing, brought his horse to the ground, the bullet just grazing the officer's leg. Only a few yards separated the two, and the Boer had his opponent covered with his pistol, when the latter shouted, "Play the game now; can't you see I'm unarmed?" Thereupon the pistol was lowered, only to be raised again, as another Westralian raced furiously up. He also met his end there, and the Boer rode off once more. A moment or two afterwards he turned in his saddle and wounded a second horse; and yet another Westralian, urging his horse forward, was struck in the stomach by a bullet from the fearless Boer's unerring pistol. The remainder of the party were a long way in the rear, and the Boer, having killed two and wounded two of the Westralians, captured the Hussar officer (whom he allowed to go unharmed), and wounded two horses, coolly rode off untouched, having first possessed himself of the horses belonging to two of those whom he had shot.

Beware of Nagging.

The woman in authority should study consideration of other people's feelings. The common scold or the continual faultfinder is perhaps the most disagreeable person in the world, not only unhappy herself, but making others so, says The Pittsburg Dispatch.

Scolding, viewed in one light, is really an accomplishment; that is, when used for the proper correction of servants and children. If you feel called upon to deliver a rebuke to a servant make it clear to the offender that your displeasure is justified; never lose your temper, but be calm and dignified, for remember that your bearing has much to do with the respect that you are held in by those under your authority. Never let a scolding degenerate into nagging, for if you do you lose all claim for respect from the delinquent, and the person at fault becomes your critic, and a very scornful critic at that.
