

THE ROMANCE OF THE AIR--THE DOG ON DUTY IN THE TIME OF WAR

Reading "the riddle of the sands"—A hydroplane making a night reconnaissance of a coast line at low water—An exquisite picture of the new romance of the air which aviation has called into being.

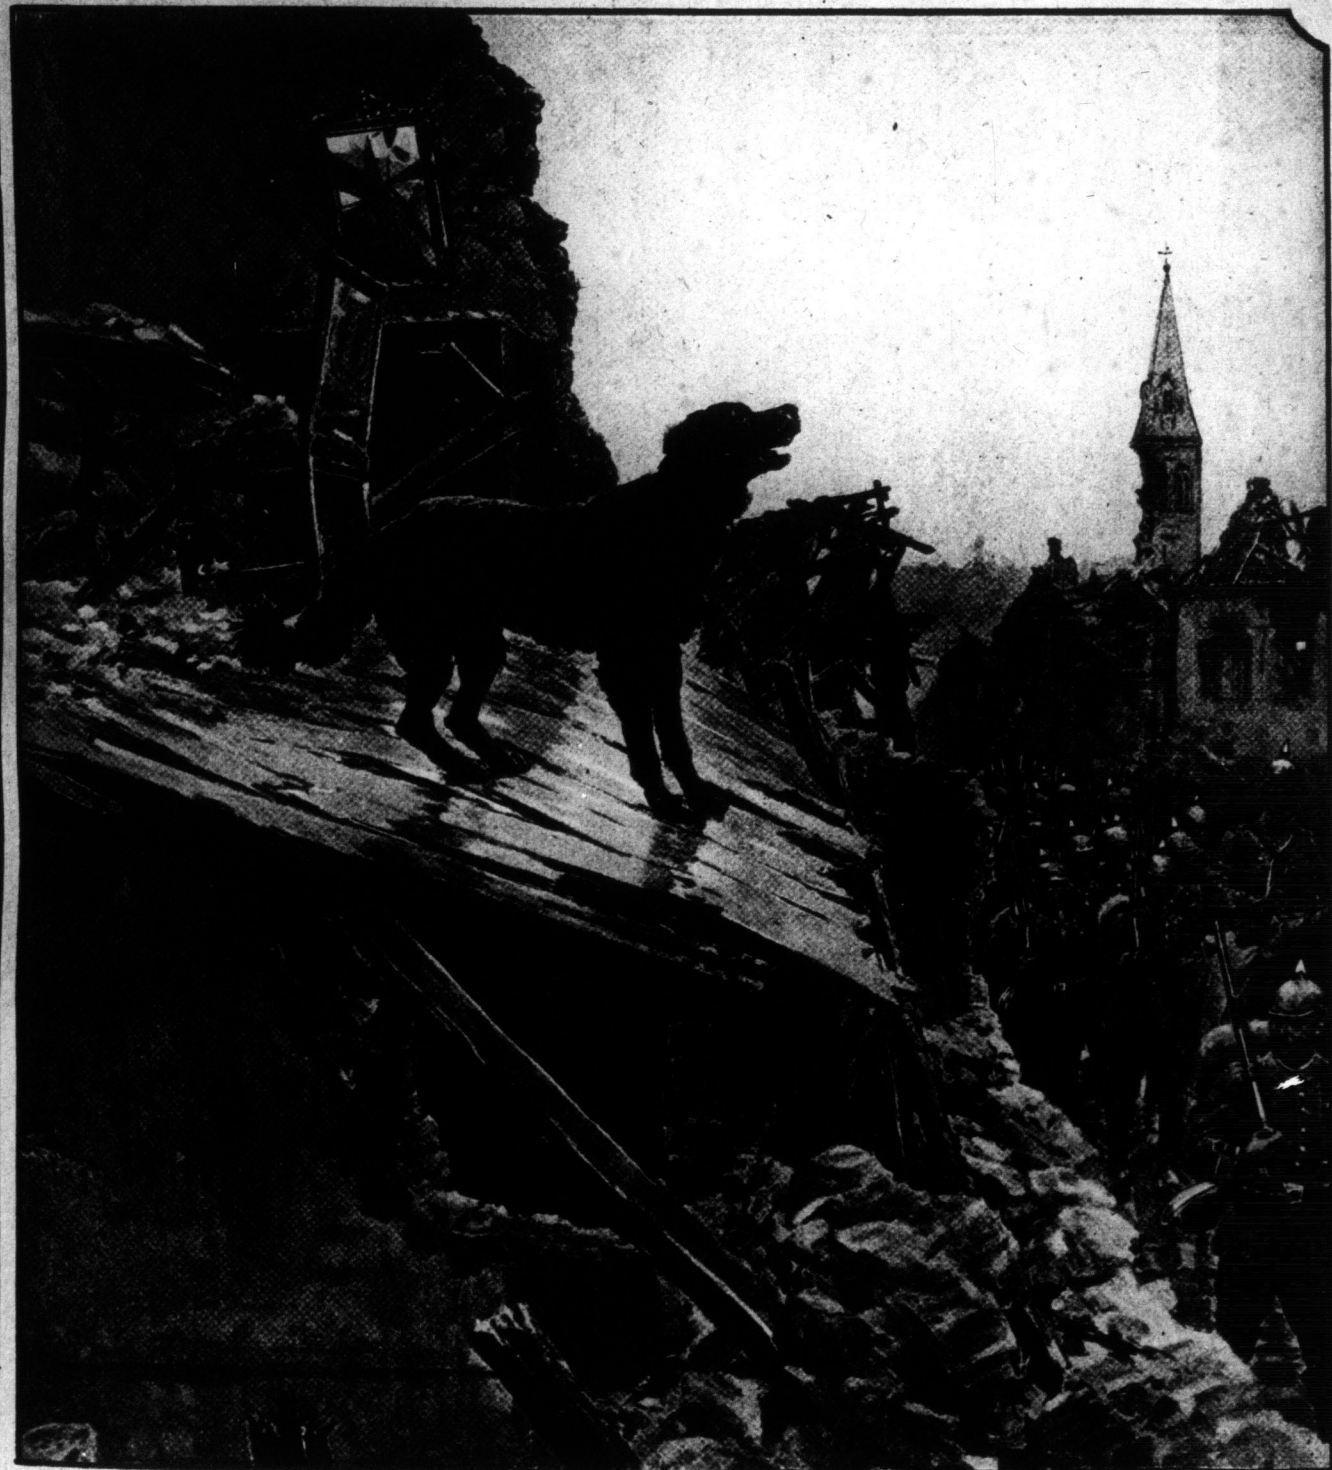

Residents at Wallsend, England, looking in the fields for souvenirs after the latest Zeppelin raid over the north east coast.

Seeking news of the missing—Relatives of Germans in the field at the "casualty" information bureau, Leipzig.

From a German Paper.

Still seeking to defend its deserted home during the entry of the Germans into Vailly—A devoted dog baying at the enemy as they tramp past him toward the Aisne.

Drawn by E. Mitanis.

"What was that?"—An outpost on duty in France with one of the hundreds of dogs trained to hear movements that men would miss.

Drawn by Paul Thiriat.
