EDWIN ARNOLD'S PLAY.

SYNOPSIS OF THE POET'S NEW DRAMA, "ADZUMA."

A Tragedy Illustrating the Heroism of a Virtuous Japanese Woman-Will be Pro-

The news that Sir Edwin Arnold has written a play founded on Japanese legend and intended to be produced at the World's Fair has excited much in-legend and intended to be produced at the World's Fair has excited much interest here. It is impossible to get any extracts from the drama, which is copyrighted in Washington, but Mr. Deakin, who superintended the publication of "The Light of the World," has kindly allowe' your correspondent to see the notes of the plot prepared by Sir Edwin himself. Here is the poet's introduction to "The Story of Adzuma," which gives the motive of the play:

"This true, tender, noble, pathetic story, by all its incidents in the highest degree dramatic and heart-stirring, has never yet been told in English, although for so many years popular in Japan. Those scholars who have given to the western world other famous pieces from Japanese history, have either feared to deal with the tragic particulars of the tale or have not found access to good versions of it. The present author has spared no pains to obtain full narratives, and has written his play with the double purpose of composing a literary work in dramatic form, worthy if it may be of the beautiful heroine, who is a pure and true type of the highest Japanese womanhood, and also of supplying for the modern English and American stage a tragedy in all respects 'actable' and illustrating with close fidelity the manners and motives of the Japanese people.

"A strong Buddhist 'birth story' forms

ple.
"A strong Buddhist 'birth story' forms a background of my story to the facts that compose the play. Adzuma, also called Kesa Gozen, lived in the reign of Yori Mato, the great shojun of Japan, in Kioto, the former capital of the empire

BEGAN LIFE AS A SERPENT.

"Her first life was that of a serpent and she was instinctively drawn to Koro Nogawa, who afterwards bore her as a woman child, and for her sake helped kill the eagle Yamato, which eagle was afterwards born a man called Morito. Thus the destiny of the two were fatally linked. Here ends the mystery and begin the facts. Morito's parents dying, he is left to the guardianship of Dozen and afterward of his son Kameja. The play illastrates the fidelity of these retainers, a characteristic of medieval Japan. Guided by a dream, Adzuma weds a knight, Wataru Watanake, and dwells with him in happiness, never having known Morito, for whom she had been vainly asked in marriage.

"Morito passes his days in knightly exercises at the Shojuns court. Now the villain, a crafty, designing friend of Morito, by Sakemune, secretly envies and hates Morito, and still more Adzuma and her husband. The method of Sakemune's hatred is largely traceable to the lovely Adzuma. Knowing that the wo-BEGAN LIFE AS A SERPENT.

and her husband. The method of Sakemune's hatred is largely traceable to the lovely Adzuma. Knowing that the woman's virtue is as impregnable as her beauty is irresistable, Sakemune lays traps and snares to entangle her with Morito. The young knight it instantly enamored of Adzuma, but resists his passion. Sakemune tells him of the bitter wrong done by his aunt, Adzuma's mother, in rejecting Morito, and adds an element of hatred. "The villain contrives another meeting and makes Morito believe that Adzuma has fallen in love with him. A generous deed of the husband arouses Morito's better nature and he puts aside his unholy love, or thinks he does. Morito rescues the husband, Wataru, from robbers and the beautiful wife is innocently grateful to her husband's rescuer. The wicked Sakemune alters a verse which Adzuma has written about the beauty of the landscape and suspends it to a maple tree, making it appear that she has expressed dislike for her husband.

RESULT OF THE VILLAIN'S PLOT.

RESULT OF THE VILLAIN'S PLOT.

"This makes Morito cast conscience to the winds. He denounces his aunt, Adzuma's mother, and threatens to kill Adzuma's mother, and threatens to kill her unless she procures a meeting with Adzuma and favors his illicit suit. Indignant, but alarmed, the mother sends for Adzuma, who comes innocently to meet the passionate lover. This is one of the thrilling scenes of the play. Morito pleads his passion furiously. Adzuma repudiates the villain's forgery, but Sakemune has forged another letter which Morito now produces. Convinced of her daughter's infidelity, Koro Nogawa strikes her. Afraid that Morito will kill her mother and perceiving that there is no way save one by which she can extricate honor, she comes to a silent and sublime resolution.

"She agrees to give herself to Morito, but he must first kill her husband. She arranges the murder. Morito is to enter her house stealthily at night. She will wash her lord's hair so that he may know it in the dark by its being wet, and he must cut off her lord's head and the it ways. Then she will grant his and he must cut off her lord's head and take it away. Then she will grant his desires. Morito accepts, with sleeves pushed back and naked sword in hand he enters the apartment, finds the sleeping form and strikes off the wetted head. Hurrying to view his ghastly trophy, he rolls from the cloth the head of his dear love, the beautiful Adzuma. She has lulled her master to sleep, wetted her own head and laid down to die to prove her honor and save her husted her own head and laid down to die to prove her honor and save her husband and mother. On the bloody pillow is a letter, tender, true and noble, explaining it all.

'Morito, grief stricken, implores the husband to put him to death. Wataru refuses and the two become Buddhist priests. Kameta, the lover's guard and retainer, kills the villian and the pure spirit of Adzuma is seen in a dream by Wataru, ascending to the world of the purified." DIVIDED INTO FOUR ACTS.

DIVIDED INTO FOUR ACTS.

The play is in four acts, with from four to eight scenes in each. There are twelve principal characters and an army of warriors, retainers, attendants and priests. The third act is devoted to a tea party in high life, which permits the introduction of geisha, or dancing girls and jugglers. The scene is laid in Tokio and the time about 1200 A.D.

Sir Edwin first heard the legend on which the play is founded at a party in Tokio, where it was told him by Ammenermoi, the most distinguished linguist of Japan. Arnold was so struck with the heroism of Adzuma that he had the ancient records searched and secured the original version, with every scrap of original detail. He also secured photographs of the scene of Adzuma's tragic death, as well as other scenes of the death, as well as other scenes of the play, and had them colored. These, with colored plates of the costumes of the period, will furnish the scene-painter the period, will furnish the scene-painter and costumer with ample hints. The drama is written in blank verse, interspersed with lyrics. Sir Edwin will arrive in this country next month and will superintend the production of the play, which he wishes brought out during the World's Fair in Chicago.—Special San Francisco Letter. interspersed with lyrics. This he succeeded in doing until it was drowned and sunk. The victor soon perceived its enemy incapable of further resistance, abandoned his body to the current, swam away and disappeared under the muddy bank.—Detroit Free Press.

A foreman of a composing room has conceived the idea of using both hands in picking up and setting the types in the stick. Ever since the composing stick was known the left hand has held the stick while the thumb pressed each successive type into place against the pieces already in line. A one armed compositor came to the foreman's room and with a single hand set almost as much type as his fellow-laborers did with two.

After thinking this over the foreman worked out two inventions, by which he worked out two inventions, by which he proposes to use both hands at once. The first is a little mechanical device for taking the place of the thumb, and the second is an attachment by which the stick can be put in a convenient position for receiving the type without being in the way of any subsequent operations. Having got so far, the foreman found Having got so far, the foreman found that his next step was to train his left hand. This was by no means easy, but after patience and practice a considerable degree of proficiency was attained, and he added 60 per cent. to his former capacity. He believes a still further advance is practicable, but is confident that any compositor by the use of his inventions will be able to add at least 50 per cent to his speed.—Pittsburg Dispatch.
