Current Fun.
A bells differs somewhat from a cow-boy. The more powder she uses the less dangerous she grows.
"Yes," said Fogg in the horse car, "I'd get up and give my seat to some of these ladies, if seats weren't so plaguesy scarce."

Entering the asylum for inebriates, he said: "Do you treat drunkards here?"
"Yes, sir." "Well, I'm one. Where's yer bar?"
Druggist (who has just given Mabel a stick of gum):—"Now, can I do anything more for you?" Mabel—"Yes! start is please."

She—"You awkward brute! You have dropped your bread and butter on the floor. He—"That's all right, my dear. Nobody will get it. I have my foot on it."

In the present style of shirt collar, a young man of fashion may be safely trusted in the gilded halls of pleasure. An entire corps de ballet could not turn his head.

"What is Smith doing now?" "He is travelling with a circus." "Pretty good work isn't it?" "No, he has nothing to do except stick his head in the big lion's mouth twice a day."

"Father, said a newly-married youth, I've discovered that my wife is a fool." "Say nothing, my son, say nothing about it, and everybody will think you are happily matched."

"Is ducky darling sick? What will he do, ducky?" "I was heard issuing from a sleeping car berth. "Try some quack medicine!" came the unsolicited response from five pairs of strong lungs.

A young man took a young lady to the dance the other night, walked several squares and didn't say but three words. Don't think that he was bashful, dear reader; he didn't have an opportunity to say any more.

A woman appeared in court charged with having poisoned her husband. The Court—"Have you anything to state in your defence?" She (in a timid voice):—"Yes, your Honor, they told me that mourning would be so becoming to me."

A poor man's wife who bought a quart of molasses at a grocery, the other day, found a diamond ring in it worth two hundred dollars. If she had bought a gallon of the precious syrup, she might have found ear-rings and breast-pin to match.

Why the World is Bad.
Old Mr. Benly—"I see a breakfast has been given to an actor in New York, and the paper says the guests were all seated at one o'clock." Old Mrs. Benly—"One o'clock! I believe in getting up early, but I wouldn't get out of bed at one o'clock to eat the best breakfast ever cooked."

"Pa," asked a little boy, "when a politician goes into office, does he have to take an oath?" "Yes." "And when he goes out of office, does he take an oath?" "Yes, but there is nothing compulsory about it."

Miss Clara (discussing the church fair):—"We are doing splendidly at my table. Last evening a gentleman gave me a $10 bill to pay for a $2 tidy, and would only accept $5 in change. Wasn't that nice in him?" Miss Ethel (with a little cough):—"Very. Last evening a gentleman gave me a $20 bill to pay for some trifle, and went off without waiting for any change at all." Miss Clara (with the same style of cough):—"Yes, I suppose it was worth that to him to get away."

She (timidly):—"I hope you are not a reckless driver?" He (sighing):—"No, although I was considered quite reckless when young." She (naively):—"Oh, I am so glad I did not know you then."

Smithkins—"Yes, Jones, I am fat, distressingly fat. But I have one consolation. In the happy hereafter I shall not be troubled with this adipose excess." Jones—"How so?" Smithkins—"Why you know corporations have no souls."

Wanted.
Humor, so rich that it would cause a prisoner to break out.
A farm that will raise something more than a mortgage.
A fish that can be weighed by his own scales.

A river that does not have to be dammed to be worth a cuss for a mill.
A few crumbs of comfort from a table of facts.

Some information as to the best method of breaking a mule without breaking his neck.
Some appliance for weighing my words.
A string of lies for a lyre.

Two Much Money.
One of the most insane suicides on record is that of George Keller, an Indiana farmer, with great possessions and a pleasant family, who killed himself because he had too much money. It seems as if he might have got rid of some of his money without getting rid of himself.

The world is full of kind-hearted persons who would be willing to share in the terrible burden which weighed poor Keller down.
