sufficient powers of description to depict the charms to be found in the life he led."—Ath., No. 2822.

2. Savage Svanetia, Lon., 1883, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"Though he certainly does not describe Svanetia better than Mr. Freshfield did, does not indeed in some respects describe it so well, he has the advantage of having looked at it from a different point of view, and his account of it is therefore not anticipated by the older writer."—Sat. Rev., 1st, 739.

"He is obviously in no respect a mountaineer, and he has no critical appreciation of mountain scenery. . . . But what he does see and feel he describes vividly. He gives plenty of spirited pictures of life and people by the way."
—Douglas W. Freshfield: Acad., xxiv, 390.
