J. T. writes from New Brunswick: "Wherever I have sold books during the past few years, I notice an increased desire for good reading. Instead of having supplied the people with all the books they wish, I find that reading one book gives the desire for another, so that as long as the country is inhabited, there will be an increasing demand for good literature. During the year I have visited most of the settlements on the eastern shore, from Richibucto to Campbelltown, and a number in the Province of Quebec. I also visited many places in the County of York, at the first of the year. In all I have sold $1631 worth of books, and made grants to the needy to the value of $123.93, and addressed 10 meetings. Although I have not many thrilling incidents to report, yet I hope that the tens of thousands of good books circulated, and the family visits made, will do very much for the glory of God. Some hardships and much self-denial have been undergone in my work, but these are counted as nothing in the good work to which I have devoted so considerable a portion of my life. Sometimes I cross a river with my waggon in two canoes, and again I ford the stream. Now and then I find difficulty in securing a place to lodge for the night, but as a rule I am kindly treated. Some fail to appreciate the Society's benevolent work, and say, 'The Society would not bother sending men out unless it paid it to do so,' entirely forgetting that no pecuniary dividends ever accrue to the members of the Society, and that the chief object of its existence is to supply the poor with the Bible and good books.

"They entirely forget the $9000 worth of books supplied gratuitously to the needy, and the 1300 Protestant families found without God's Word, and in scores of places supplied without charge. I am more determined than ever to work faithfully in distributing the good books that will exert untold power when I am dead, and hope that the Society may have marked prosperity in its good work. I am happy to say that I find the interest in the Society's work increasing, and am sure that if the Secretary repeats his visits to the chief places in New Brunswick there will be increased donations."
