artery. Although the neck was very short the cutting had been very clean. Pinched, suck with needles, submitted to the most painful experiments, the head never moved; the face 'remained unaltered, not a muscle quivered. The left car was completely calcined in the flame of a candle without obtaining the smallest appearance of the head into four parts, and, using hammer, as calpel and the saw, they took away the upper portion of the skull and withdrew the brain. This occupied ten minutes. Immediately on being submitted to an electric battery the remains of the head at once displayed nervous contractions—the teeth chattered, the mouth shut, the eye and the cheek made those grimaces which are observed in sleeping people when tickled with a feather. With the body the same result was obtained. It was absolutely without feeling. It was opened, the heart, lungs and intestines were removed, and then, on being placed in contact with the electric battery, the arms and legs instantly moved. At this moment Dr. Evrard asked me what o'clook it was, and it appeared that forty minutes had elapsed from the time of the execution. Lastly came the conclusion of the dectors is that the movements observed in the bedies of persons guillotined on being subjected to this action of electricity are absolutely mechanical and display neither any remainer of life nor of sensation. The experiment will be the subject of a memoir, which will shortly be presented to the Academy of Medicine by M. Evrard, and in which he will demonstrate that death by decapitation is instantaneous.
