The so called stocks go down and friends betray us secret pipe proved to be an ordinary and loved ones disappoint us—but these water pipe belonging to the urban joys for which we long, they cannot council.

I love to hear wise old grayheads advise young men how to go. I love to hear them ooze wisdom from their elenched lips, and I also like to watch their bony hands tremble the while they talk in deep, dignified tones, and that look of fear deep-seated in their little eyes is so merry! So merry! What do they know about riches? What right have they to speak of

The gold they gloat over is a stamp-ed something, and tomorow the world may change its mind and monetise corncobs, and then the pigpen will be the seat of power. The things upon which they base their beliefs are all changeable, and the things upon which I am fool enough to base mine are
