Bagging a Husband

By Charles Curtz Hahn

"I am going to have a husband if I have to bring one to his knees at the point of a revolver. Some girls are ashamed to say they wish to get married, but I acknowledge that I do and that I am not going to die an old maid unless all men are braver than I think they are." A merry peal of laughter greeted this sally, for the speaker, May Wilding, was a favorite with the girls as well as men. Her auditors were a group of young women who had arrived that day for a visit with their college classmate, Gertie Manders. "We shall hear of your prowling through the woods next with Dick's rifle over your shoulder, looking for a man, I suppose," said Gertie. "But to come down to realities, girls, it is time we were in bed if we intend picnicking in the morning." And the matrimonial discussion was closed by a scattering of guests to their different

"You never would guess where I shall put you tonight," Gertie remarked to May as she ushered her down the hall. "Dick has been away all summer, and as we are just a little crowded I am going to put you in his room. It has been well fumigated, so that it does not smell of tobacco or guns. But I forgot-you are a huntress your-

"Yes," laughed May; "I can hit the target, although I never won a prize by my shooting. By the way, Gertie, gratulatory messages from ladies in let me show you something." And, opening her trunk, she took from it an every city, town and village in Canada. old fashioned revolver minus a lock and with only the stub of a trigger. Such unsolicited testimony regarding "Oh, what do you carry that with the vast superiority of Diamond Dyes is conclusive proof that no other

"To scare away burglars when I meet them," replied May, displaying the innocent weapon which her small brother had dropped in as a joke while she was packing her trunk. "Well, there is no danger of your being disturbed by them here," laughed her hostess. "One never knows," said May, with your address at once to The Wells & a pout and a shrug of her shoulders, as she bade her good night and tossed the antiquated relic carelessly on the

> Three hours later, when the whole household was wrapped in sleep, a young man walked rapidly from the gate to the front entrance of the Manders residence, drew a latchkey from his pocket, opened the door and slipped in so cautiously that he could not have been heard had any one been awake. He paused in the hall a moment to hang up his hat and then crept silently up the broad carpeted stairs if you have not used it; it will prove and seftly tried the door of the room a delightful treat at the morning in which the husband hunter was reposing. Suppressing an ejaculation at finding it locked, the young man turned away, but paused again at the head of the stairs, muttering:

"I forgot the bathroom. They may have left that unlocked." He retraced his steps, passing the barred door and trying a second one a little farther down the hall. Here he was successful, and, passing through the bathroom, he entered the room of the sleeping girl. "Queer that door was locked," he said aloud as he lighted the gas. Then he sat down in an easy chair facing the window while he unlaced his shoes. May had been in a light sleep when her door was tried and was dropping back into a doze when she heard the bathroom door open and steps issue from it to her own room. "Who can it be?" she said to herself and was about to call Gertie's name when the intruder struck a match and she saw that it was a man. "A burglar!" she thought. "And Gertie said there was no danger!" Then she remembered the revolver via Chicago & Northwestern R'y; $30 from Chicago to Helena, Butte, Anaconda, Ogden and Salt Lake City; $30.50 Spokane, $33.00 Portland, Seattle, Tacoma, Vancouver, Victoria and a large number of other points. Tourist algenting care award to from Chishe had tossed upon the bed and forgotten to put away. Softly she slipped her hand down over the bedspread until she grasped the weapon. "It was lucky I forgot to put it away," she thought as she saw the burglar making himself at home. "He intends to take off his shoes here and then rob the house."

As she came to this conclusion the purglar arose and turned toward the bed. A look of surprise flashed over his face, but before he could move the rusty old gun was pointed at his head "Don't move or I will shoot! Throw up your hands! I've hit a smaller object than you many a time." The burglar paused, but did not throw up his hands, and the girl in the bed, realizing the uselessness o her weapon, began to weaken and wish she were not so entirely at his mercy. "I beg your pardon"- came from the

Before she came to a de is treated as strictly private and sacision she heard Mrs. Manders exclaimmorning. "Like him! What do you mean?" queried the bewildered girl. "Why, didn't you try to bring him sumption of innocence. "I naturally supposed it was a case of love at first sight."

Never during the following weeks were May and Dick together that Gertie, the tactless, did not appear with some senseless remark about guns and game until her friend began fairly to loathe her unfortunate adventure, her visit and everything connected with it. Her manner to Dick became daily more constrained and chilly. He was in despair as to how he could please her and at last confided in his sister.

"So you are really in love with her and are desperate because she will and are desperate because she will have nothing to say to you!" was her Nevada, Idaho, Oregon, consoling exclamation. you goosy!"

He acted so promptly on her advice that Gertie heard the welcome news that very night in a bedtime con-"But, oh, Gertie," May whispered, half laughing, half crying, "how could you tease me so all the time?" "My friend," was the oracular response, "for all your bravery with a gun I don't believe that you would have bagged your husband if I had not made you think you did not want to."

Doing Their Arithmetic.

Children believe so confidently what they hear that if they do not hear accurately their minds sometimes run into queer fancies. A well known professor remembers that when he was a child he sang "Glory, glory, had a new year!" for "Glory, glory, halleluiah!" A story of a similar childish misunderstanding of sound is told by a Sunday school teacher. The infant class was reciting the Christmas lesson. Six-year-old Harold was called upon to tell the story of the Saviour's birth. "Well," he began, "the shepherds were out one night doing their arithmetic when the angels came"-"But stop, Harold," interrupted the puzzled teacher, "and tell me what you mean by that." "Well," replied Harold, "I don't see how they could do arithmetic in the dark, but that's what they were doing."

"Now think, Harold," said the teacher, "and tell the story as nearly as you can in the words of the Bible." So Harold began again: "One night the shepherds were dividing in the

"Abiding" had sounded to his ear like "dividing," and dividing was "doing their arithmetic."

Fraudulent Jewels. Since solutions of aniline dyes possess the property of imparting to genuine jewels as well as glass paste a deep, rich color if left long enough immersed in them and since they possess also the property of imparting precisely the characteristic color of a genuine jewel the swindler has it not only in his power to dye cut glass paste, but also inferior cut gems, of the color of a ruby, an emerald or a sapphire, since fuchsine is the handsomest ruby red shade, while bleu de Paris imitates absolutely that of the sapphire and aniline green that of the emerald. Such a fraud, however, can be made still more complicated by using genuine off colored rubies, sapphires or emer-nids and dyeing them with the corresponding aniline dyes, thereby raising their value tenfold. It is exceedingly difficult to recognize this fraud because the color of such a well corroded jewel can no longer be washed off even with hot water. Only the bleaching power of sunlight might after a time assist in revealing the swindle.
