"Well, I can easily discover it if they do, and we will change ours accordingly."

"Then we will consider it a settled thing," said Carleton, speaking for the first time. "It will only be a little fun. That is all the girls mean by trying their tricks, and that is all we mean by ours."

"Well, I leave it all to you fellows," said Hammersmith. "You make your arrangements, and I'll help you all I can."

"Thank you, old fellow. I knew you would. You're a boss old boy. Ta, ta."

And the two young fellows passed out, but once out of earshot they laughed heartly. "How easily he fell into the trap!" they said. "It will be the best joke out."

But Hammersmith gave himself up to reflections, like the following."

But Hammersmith gave himself up to reflections, like the following.

Blindfolded and alone I wait,
Loss seems too bitter, gain too late;
Too heavy burdens in the load,
And too few helpers on the road,
And joy is weak and grief is strong.
And years and day so long, so long;
Yet this one thing I learn to know,
Each day more surely as I go,
That I am glad the good and ill
By changeless law are ordered still
"Not as I will."

But Hammersmith gave himself up to reflections like the following:

"I shall be certain to find out then. It's hardly fair to the girl, though they say 'all's fair in love or war'; but, oh, my Dora, if I may ever call you mine, if it cause you one pang, I will make it up to you a hundred-fold!"

Before going further was not the said practice of the boys requests, all his own hones. steals Hallowe'en Story.

Before going further we must explain the remark of the boys to one another we must explain the remark of the boys to one another we must explain the remark of the boys to one another after leaving Hammersmith. Both these young fellows having fallen in love with Dora Vane, or imagined themselves so, which is the next best thing, had, with the conceit usually attendant on youth and good looks, also imagined each one that he himself was Miss Dora's favourite. Poor Silas Hammersmith, who imagined that Dora favourite. Poor Silas Hammersmith straightened up and glared at the mirror in his bachelor apartments as if he considered it in some way responsible for the present depolation on the state of his affairs.
