The Evening Chit-Chat

By NUTR CARBON

The little girl visitor left our house the other day in tears.

No, we hadn't been mistreating her. She cried because she felt so badly to go. But we could claim none of the credit of these complimentary tears for ourselves. It all belonged to a fuzzy little ball of Maltese kittenhood, with which the little girl visitor had been having the time of her young life all the afternoon.

She was "simply crazy" about that kitten. She romped with it, played with it, cuddled it, laughed at it and called on us to admire its wonderful tricks for two solid hours, and when she was finally torn away her mother declared that she didn't know when she had been anywhere with Rita, when she had behaved so well, been so little trouble and enjoyed herself so much.

We ventured to ask if Rita had ever had a kitten of her own.

"Goodness, no," cried her mother. "I can't endure them myself. I've never had one in the house. I don't like any kind of pets, and I have never let my children have any. They are too much bother."

Don't you think "petless" children are an almost wicked subversion of the laws of child nature?

I do.

I think pets should be a part of every child's diversion and education. I believe that the care and friendship of these little dumb creatures will bring out desirable traits in every child.

For, if the children are properly restrained and guided in their treatment of the little pensioners, they are sure to learn patience, forbearance and the fine tenderness of the strong towards the weak.

If you should stop and ask a crowd of boys who were tying a tin can to a dog's tail, or otherwise tormenting some dumb creature, if any of them had a dog of his own at home, I don't believe you'd find that a single one had.

And what a never exhausted source of diversion and occupation for the busy idleness of childhood pets are! Guinea pigs, rabbits, white mice, puppies, kittens—lucky the child who has had a full course in this school of pet ownership, with perhaps a few extras in the way of out of the ordinary pets thrown in! And, how I pity the child who has never had one kitten or white mouse to call his own.

Of course, the little girl visitor who spent such a happy afternoon with our kitten, would not have found such continued entertainment in the possession of some pet would have given enjoyment and interest to many otherwise dull moments.

"Oh, mother, Ralph's got some little Mts of baby guinea pigs, and he says he'll give me one if you'll let me have it. May I? Say I may."

"Oh, mother, I found the dearest little kitty on the street, and it followed me, and it hasn't got any home anywhere, and I know it's hungry. Please, oh, please, mother, can't I keep it?"

What mother hasn't listened a dozen times to breathless appeals like this, listened and perhaps started with grown-up conservatism to refuse?

But, oh, I hope she remembered her own youthful delight in the possession of some pet, and reconsidered.

I do not believe in caging any wild thing.

I do not believe in allowing children to be cruel—even unintentionally—to their pets.

I do not believe in allowing children to acquire pets and then thrust the responsibility of them upon their mothers. They should be made to realize that ownership means responsibility, and obliged either to shoulder that responsibility or forego the ownership.

With these restrictions, I believe that every child should have at least one pet in the course of his childhood, and that the who doesn't, has missed both part of his education and part of his natural right as child.

Shooting With the King

His Majesty Always Enjoys Himself at His Highland Home

Shooting, either with gun or rifle, is His Majesty's favourite pastime, and he is never so thoroughly happy as when tramping through the preserves of Windsor, Balmoral, or Sandringham with his gun under his arm and his favourite dog by his side. Nor are there many men in Europe who can approach him in accuracy of aim.

The wild moors and rough uplands around Balmoral have always appealed to the King with considerable force, and all through the strenuous times he has endured in connection with his Coronation he looked forward to the time when, for a brief spell, he might put the pomp and circumstance of the Court aside and spend his days in the bracing air of the Highlands, shooting and fishing. This time has now arrived.

On the Moors.

Doubly honoured are those whom His Majesty invites to join his house-parties for the shooting. Not only are they the guests of their Sovereign, but they are in the company of one of the best all-round sportsmen of the day. The King is an early starter, and those who are to accompany him in the field have likewise to be about at an hour that must feel very strange to some of them. It is at Balmoral that His Majesty entertains his largest shooting-parties, so that what happens here may be taken as typical of what goes forward whenever there is a shoot at any of the Royal residences. Grone are, as a rule, very plentiful upon the Balmoral preserves. But they want finding. To quote His Majesty's words when Prince of Wales, "You have to go after them; the birds will not come and feed on the lawns just to oblige you." Therefore those who are to shoot with the King are often called at 5 a.m., when the dawn is just breaking. When they leave their rooms they find an ample repast awaiting them even at this early hour. There is a large choice of hot and cold dishes, though His Majesty is himself a believer in a very light diet, a cup of coffee and a roll or two sufficing him for breakfast.

Sandwich-boxes and flasks are then filled, guns examined, pockets loaded with cartridges, and the party sallies. If one of the outlying beats are to be tried first stout Highland ponies or motor cars are awaiting the guns to transport them to where their sport is waiting. The roads about Balmoral are, in the majority of cases, none too good, so that, whenever it is at all possible, His Majesty rides in preference to motoring.

Deer-Stalking at Balmoral.

Most sportsmen are agreed that, to shoot grouse to perfection, they should be attacked early in the morning, before the sun has reached its full height. When the chosen beat is approached the King rapidly maps out his plan of campaign. His knowledge of woodcraft is little short of wonderful, and he seems to realize instinctively what the birds are likely to do. He disposes his field with rare skill and discrimination. It is not His Majesty's way to accept the most favourable position for himself. On the contrary, he prefers to take up his stand where the birds may be comparatively scarce and more difficult to hit. But any grouse that approaches his gun and gets away unscathed is a tribute fortunate. It is not often that King George falls in his aim, and the rapidity with which he can discharge both barrels, grasp another gun from the eager loader behind him, and fire off is most striking testimony to his skill. A couple of years or so ago, while shooting with Lord Iveagh over the famous Elvedon Hall estates in Suffolk, the King, through the assistance of three pheasants in quick succession. His fourth barrel remained loaded. As he turned, His Majesty saw a hare bolt into a thicket close at hand. Instantly he fired, hitting "puss" clean between the shoulders.

By the time that lunch is due His Majesty and his guests are quite prepared to do full justice to it. A pack of sandwiches is a very useful addition to a shooting outfit upon the moors of Deeside, but one has not been ramping for many hours before the necessity for something more substantial is impressed upon the mind in no uncertain manner. The Royal lunches are very plain in character, though ample in choice and quantity. The King has something approaching contempt for the sumptuous meals that many "sportsmen" of to-day appear to consider a necessary portion of a day's shooting, and his injunction is often to be heard—"Eat quickly; we're losing the best of the fun."

As a rule Queen Mary and the ladies of the household join the guns or lunch, but it sometimes falls out that the game takes the party farther afield than was anticipated, and lunch consequently falls them. Upon these occasions the King has been known to sit down under the lee of a haystack and enjoy a crust of bread and cheese, washed down with a bottle of beer, with a sigh of complete contentment. A couple of pipes or a cigarette or two follow, and His Majesty is as eager as any schoolboy to be after the birds again.

Another sport that appeals very powerfully to His Majesty is the only one of deer-stalking. The head of the first stag—a beautiful specimen—ever shot by King George is mounted and hung in the entrance hall at Sandringham, close to the one shot by the late Duke of Clarence and Avonliffe.

The Royal shooting-parties end rather early in the day, the time naturally varying with the season of the year. There is nothing more fatal to a man's aim, His Majesty once remarked, "than to continue to shoot in an indifferent light." Therefore by four o'clock—or five o'clock at the latest—the guns proceed to make their way homewards, pipes are lighted, and it is possible to chat in peace over the affairs of the day. So far as is possible, vehicles meet them at the first convenient spot, and these are extremely welcome, since every member of the party is by that time more or less worn out with the exertions through which they have passed. They are likewise ready for the cup of tea that awaits them at Balmoral, or whichever of the Royal seats is being visited.—Tit-Bits.

Danderine

Grows hair and we can prove it

Hair Becomes Soft, Fluffy, Lustrous and Beautiful Immediately After a Danderine Hair Cleanse

Get a 25 Cent Bottle Now and Forever Stop Falling Hair, Itching Scalp and Dandruff

A little Danderine now will immediately double the beauty of your hair—No difference how dull, faded, brittle and scraggy, just moisten a cloth with Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair taking one small strand at a time. The effect is immediate and amazing—your hair will be light, fluffy and wavy and have an appearance of abundance; an incomparable lustre, softness and suppleness, the beauty and shimmer of true hair health.

Try as you will after an application of Danderine, you cannot find a single trace of dandruff or a loose or falling hair and your scalp will not itch, but what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use when you will actually see new hair, fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—sprouting all over the scalp.

Danderine is to the hair what fresh showers of rain and sunshine are to vegetation. It goes right to the roots, invigorates and strengthens them. Its life-producing properties cause the hair to grow abundantly long, strong and beautiful.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store or toilet counter and prove to yourself tonight—now—that your hair is as pretty and soft as any—that it has been neglected or injured by careless treatment—that's all—you surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it, if you will just try a little Danderine. Real surprise awaits you.

Uncle Walt

THE POET PHILOSOPHER.

Our home is rather humble, Maud, the roof is on the bum; the kitchen table's wapper-jawed, the chairs are out of plumb. The stairway railing's badly hacked, screen door has no catch, our crockery is mostly cracked, the glassware doesn't match. I do not blame you that you sigh and shed a tear that smart, when you see rich ladies scooting by in gorgeous chug-chug carts. We have this comfort though, my pet—a joy that never soured: We're absolutely out of debt, and what we have is ours. I'd rather use a sway-backed chair, attired in garments frayed, than loll on divan rich and rare, for which I hadn't paid. Some day I hope to take you, dear, a trip around the globe, and you will make the queens look queer when in your jeweled robe; but until I can raise the price, to give you gems, my pet—this cheap joint lay-out must suffice—I will not go in debt.

Reindeer for the Northwest.

When Dr. Grenfell, of Labrador, comes to the peaseage, as he would, if services to the Empire were the sole commendation, he ought to be called Lord Reindeer. It was he that brought reindeer to Labrador to take the place of the prothonotaries and expensive dogs. The dog has to be fed, and in times of famine, which are not infrequent, becomes dangerous. The deer feeds not only itself but its master's family with its milk and with its flesh. The reindeer is naturally at home in our wilds, being little else than a tame variety of our own caribou. It has proved a great success on the Labrador coast, and is now being introduced from there into the Northland of the great west, where it will, no doubt, everywhere replace the dog as carrier.—Montreal Witness, Sept. 27.

Animals to be Used for Carrying Purposes in Long Reaches of the North.

Edmonton, September 27.—Three carloads of Lapland reindeer from Northern Newfoundland was the remarkable freight which arrived in Edmonton yesterday on the C.N. R. from the East. There were forty-three reindeer in three cars and a fourth was stocked with reindeer food, moss and grass. The reindeer are the representatives of the species with which the Department of the Interior has planned to stock the district of Mackenzie. The animals are to be used for carrying purposes in long reaches of the north in place of dogs.

The consignment of reindeer left Newfoundland on September 8th, and passed through Quebec on September 18th, to reach Edmonton a week later.

The reindeer will be taken by rail as far as Stony Creek, sixty miles north of Edmonton, and from that point they will be taken overland to Athabasca Landing. Some that have been well broken will be led and others will be conveyed in wagons. At Athabasca Landing the animals will be placed in scows and floated down the Athabasca river to Fort Smith, which is their destination. They will have travelled fully five thousand miles by the time their journey is at an end.
