Provision Against Unemployment.

BLACK WINTER FOR GERMANY.

"From all parts of the empire come reports of large cities and local government bodies beginning to make provision against unemployment in the coming winter," says the Chronicle.

"In Berlin a strong committee dealing with the subject has a ready made arrangements for building works, drainage, etc., and also for the more perfect working of labour exchanges. Similar steps are being taken in:

Frankfurt Munich,
Breslau Leipzig,
Cologne Dresden.

"It seems to be the universal opinion that the trade boom of the past five years is at an end and the lean years are not inevitable.

"Germany spends 50 millions sterling every year on its poor. Instead of decreasing this expenditure increases year by year. But close to one's hand are the means of giving ample employment. There are thousands of square miles of waste lands and moors in Germany only waiting the labour of men's hands to render them fruitful.

WHAT 40 UNEMPLOYED HAVE DONE.

"One example is given where 40 unemployed, Berliners have done wonders with a tract of land placed at their disposal by the State. They have cleared six acres of wood, and out of the thousands of trees cut down have manufactured simple furniture and fencing. The German Agricultural Society have given them manure and with this they have turned 20 acres into good arable land. Other acres suitable for residence, they have planted with trees other again, with sandy soil, they have turned into asparagus beds. They have laid roads and simple railways on the land at the disposal. There can be no doubt as to the healthiness of the work, and it is in every sense reproductive.

Weddings at Sea.

Captain of Warship or Merchantman May Perform Ceremony.

Very few people are aware of the power vested in the commanding officer of a British man-of-war, or in the captain of a British merchantman when on the high seas or in a foreign port, where there is no British representative, as regards marriage, providing one or both of the contracting parties be a British subject. The scope afforded either of the officers is such as might be turned to very good account by enterprising novelists.

The captains of His Majesty's vessels are authorized by the Foreign Marriage Act of 1892 to act as marriage registrars just the same as an ambassador, consul, or British resident abroad, and the ceremony may take place on the high seas or on board a British man-of-war on a "prescribed modifications." These indicate that the legality of the marriage depends on the commanding officer fulfilling the conditions of the Foreign Marriage Act, which, with very slight differences, conform to the conditions as to age, consent of parents, false oaths, residence, and so on applying to marriages in the United Kingdom.

Though no one can question a captain's authority to marry at sea or on board a vessel on a foreign station, if any of the provisions laid down are not fulfilled, a secretary of state has the power by means of a warrant to vary or annul the marriage performed under the Act.

Before this Act commanding officers of men-of-war and merchantmen celebrated marriages on board under an old Act and the marriage had to be confirmed on arrival at the nearest port by the British representative there. Where there was none, the captain himself had to act as consul and confirm his own deed.

In the merchant service the skipper has even greater. He is not obliged to give a certificate, the only compulsion on him being the necessity to "log" the marriage in his official log-book, where it may be seen entered between reports dealing with the vessel's victualling, her course, the weather encountered, the ships spoken to, and the many humdrum details of "writing up the log."—Weekly Telegraph.

Irish Ghost Stories.

House Built on Fairy Path All Broken To Pieces.

A Dublin correspondent sends an extraordinary dispatch in regard to a collection of ghost stories which the Rev. St. John D. Seymour, rector of Cappawhite, County Tipperary, has received. He is writing a book on physical phenomena and advertised for records of "experiences." The replies he received were more numerous than he had ever, even in his most hopeful moments, expected.

"I have received," he said, "more ghost stories than I could get into a single book." He went on to relate a specimen "fairy" story which he obtained from a man at Port Arlingford, Queen's County:

"A man near here saved $2,500 and built himself a house on a fairy path. During his first night in the house all the furniture—chairs, beds and crockery—moved as if on wires, and after an hour everything was broken, and the man himself was seriously hurt. Having spent his life's savings on the house, he determined to live in it. When he recovered from his injuries he again went to live in the house. He had a similar experience, and finally he had to leave."

A justice of the peace, G. H. Miller, of Edgeworthstown, County Longford, related the following experience:

"During the winter of 1877 I was riding a horse past the old ruins and burial ground of Abbeyshille, on a bright moonlight night. In the middle of the churchyard I saw what I took to be a policeman in a long overcoat. He walked toward me and suddenly disappeared. I could see no trace of him. Afterward I learned that it was not a policeman, but a monk, whose ghost appeared there so often that after dark people would go miles out of their way to avoid passing the churchyard."

A woman told the following uncanny story of a haunted castle in the South of Ireland:

"When we went to live in the castle we could hear people talking in every room, and in every hall and corridor, but no explanation could be found. Often and often we heard terrible fighting in the glen beside the castle, the hideous roar of angry voices and the clashing of steel. No person would go down the glen after dark."

"One night I was sitting talking with my governess when I heard a step coming upstairs slowly. I went out and met the figure of a woman. It was the figure of a woman. She walked past me, hurried to a window at the end of the landing, and with a shriek which I shall never forget, she fell heavily to the ground outside."

It Is Lucky to Steal.

An extraordinary example of foolish superstition was disclosed recently in the case of a Hampshire farmer who was convicted of stealing turnips from a neighbor. He explained that he could easily afford to pay for them, and that, moreover, he had plenty of turnips of his own but he wanted stolen ones to make a concoction for a cow which had fallen sick, for he firmly believed that no other could be so efficacious.

A Staffordshire miner, too, was summoned for stealing a few broad beans from a garden. His excuse was that he wanted the pods to cure a corn which was troubling him. He believed that if the inner side of the pod was rubbed on the corn the latter would in a few days disappear. In this case, too, it was pointed out that the beans must be stolen ones, or they would be of no use. Examples might be multiplied from different parts of our own; but a similar belief also holds in Germany where, practically every one buys a ticket for one or other of the State lotteries. Many of the uneducated peasants will tell you that they are sure of winning if the ticket they have bought with stolen money.

Most probably this idea of stealing things for luck originally arose from the natural desire of the criminal to find some excuse for his delinquencies.—Thomson's Weekly.
