CHAPTER XXXIX.

The Home-Coming.

"Well—er—yes!" he said, and at once began to talk about the journey of the morrow.

They started quite early the next day, and Norah cast a wistful glance at the sunny watering place as the train moved out of the station. She had been so supremely and perfectly happy there, you see. It was a long journey, and they did not arrive at Santeigh until late in the afternoon.

"It all depends," replied Cyril "Anyhow, here is the Court brougham. Would you mind staying at the Court, or would you prefer to go on to Ferndale?"

Norah was puzzled by his manner, but kept her promise, and refrained from asking any questions.

"I shall like just what you like to do," she replied, and, of course, he put his arm round her and kissed her. They reached the Court, and she was stricken dumb with surprise at the sight of the Ferndales and Jack, who, with Mr. Petherick, were grouped in the hall, evidently anxiously awaiting their arrival.

"Why, what does it all mean?" she exclaimed, as she flew to Lady Ferndale with a little cry of delight. "Why are you all here—why are we here? Has the earl come back? Mr. Petherick, surely you don't mean to keep me in the dark?"

"Not for a moment, my dear young lady!" he responded, with a little cough of bewilderment. "I should be only too glad to enlighten you in respect to this—this—mystery; but I'm as much in the dark as you are. All I know is that I have received a communication from the earl—they had moved into the drawing room by this time, and he stood in the center of the group looking from one to the other. "His lordship has written stating that he has invited you and Mr. Burne and our good friends here to dinner to-night, and that he hopes to have the pleasure of meeting them. The note reached me this morning, and contains just that and nothing more!"

Norah remained silent and open-eyed, looking from one to the other. "It's very mysterious," said Lady Ferndale with perfect gravity. "But, title. "The Earl of Arrowsdale, for whom we have been looking so long, is none other than your husband, Mr. Cyril Burne!"

Norah uttered a faint cry, and trembled a little; and then, as they gathered round her, and, all talking at once, began to explain the mystery, the tears rose in her eyes, and, half-laughing, half-crying, she hid her face on Cyril's breast.

They were all excited, and the old lawyer certainly not the least.

"Of course, I have been a blind old idiot," he exclaimed to Lord Ferndale, "for I should have guessed the truth long ago. But, you see, we lawyers are not accustomed to romance, and—and it never occurred to me that Mr. Burne could be other than he represented himself. If I were to try and tell you how glad I am that things are as they are I couldn't do it!" And he laughed, and coughed, and nodded to one and the other. "No need to trouble about that money now, you know, Lord Ferndale," and he chuckled.

"The money the late earl left to Norah?" said Lord Ferndale.

"Yes, yes!" assented the old man. "We shan't dispute the will now, Lord Arrowsdale won't be troubled by us. He may keep it and welcome."

Cyril heard and looked round.

"It is not Lord Arrowsdale's to keep, Mr. Petherick," he said with a laugh. "Will you take charge of this for Lady Arrowsdale, please?" And he handed him the long blue packet in which he had inclosed the marriage certificate.

"Open it, please."

Mr. Petherick opened it, and hastily read the paper inclosed. Then he held out his hand with an impulse of satisfaction and approval.

"It is a deed of gift to Lady Norah of all that the will gave her!" he exclaimed. "My lord," and he bowed to Cyril with an almost solemn formality, "permit me to express my conviction that in the present holder of your ancient and honorable title your house has a worthy and noble representative."

There was more handshaking and talking, but at last Lord Ferndale reminded the rest that dinner was waiting—and spoiling—and Cyril, relinquishing Norah to him, gave his arm to Lady Ferndale.

As the door opened they saw that the hall was full of servants. The butler had borne the startling news of Cyril's identity to the servants' hall, and, in a flutter of intense excitement, he had gathered together to give him and his beautiful wife a welcome.

Not for many years had the vaulted roof rung with such cheers as rose when the party came out from the drawing-room into the hall, and it was not until Cyril had led Norah forward, and spoken a few heartfelt words of greeting and thanks that the party were permitted to go in to dinner.

And long before the meal was over was heard the buzz and murmur of an excited crowd gathered on the terrace outside, for the news had spread through the village like wildfire, and the excited people had hurried to the Court to ascertain for themselves whether the story were true; whether, in deed, Mr. Cyril Burne were the new Earl of Arrowsdale, and beautiful Lady Norah, whom they had learned to love, the countess; and it was not until Cyril had taken Norah out onto the terrace and presented himself and her to the cheering crowd that it would consent to betake itself to the merrymaking for which the household had made hasty preparations.

It was a night of wild excitement. Some ready-witted individuals rushed off to the church and set the bells ringing, and others hurriedly built up a huge bonfire on the green, and soon the flames were springing sky high, and helping the bells to proclaim the home-coming of the young earl and his bride.

With her arm within her husband's, and surrounded by their friends, Norah watched the red reflection of the great fire and listened to the pealing of the bells with feelings of profound joy and gratitude; joy so perfect and absorbing that it is little wonder she forgot for the moment the existence of such a person as Guildford Berton, or the mystery attending the disappearance of Becca South.

Indeed, not one of them, excepting Jack, gave a thought to the man

NO GREAT PITY.

GREAT MUNITIONS EXPLOSION NEW JERSEY

NEW YORK, To-day A two hour series of tremors explosions in the munitions plant the Canadian Car and Foundry, Lyndhurst, in North Eastern Jersey, this afternoon created great thousands to flee for safety, six o'clock this evening the explosions were still going on, some like the roar of heavy artillery, great fire was raging in the sky which covers several acres. Telephone communication with the plant was impossible this time, lives had been lost. The explosion of the plant are reported, however has escaped in time.

THE NEW WAR LOAN

LONDON, To-day In his announcement on the loan, Bonar Law said that interest in the loan would be on better terms than would be offered in the past. There was no limited rate of interest. The Government would pay for money, he declared, but so far as could forecast the future a rate of interest than at present would not be paid. Bonar Law outlined terms of the new War Loan approximately as had been forecast. Bulk of the issue will be five per cent bonds, held at 95, thus yielding approximately five and one quarter per cent. There will be four per cent bonds free of income tax to be at par. The five per cent will be issued for a period of thirty years with the option of redemption in twelve years. The four will run twenty-five years with the same terms. Five per cent of the subscriptions must be paid with application. The remainder will be payable in equal instalments before May 1. The previous War Loan may be converted into the new loan at par, similar provisions are made for conversion of various types of term paper issued in the last months. Foreign holders of the loan will not be liable to British income tax. The sinking fund provision outlined by Bonar Law was most striking innovation in connection with the new loan. This is the first time that a British loan has been issued with a sinking fund provision. The Government agrees to set aside monthly one-eighth of one per cent of the total amount of the issue, the sum representing an annual sinking fund appropriation of one and a half per cent. It will be allowed to accumulate until a fund of ten millions is in hand, which will then be used for purchasing bonds in the market whenever they fall below issue price.

"As long as there is money in the country, we will not allow lack of it to hamper the conduct of the war. There is a limit to the rate of interest the Government will pay for money. If this loan fail (but it not) there are other methods by which can be applied and the rate of interest in such case will not be five and one quarter per cent."
