Woman Sleeps for 32 Years.

Regina, Texas, March 25.-Rip Van Winkle's long nap has had several counterparts in real life, the most notorious being the long ristance sleeping record established by Caroline Olsson, a Swedish woman, who fell into a trance on Dec. 24, 1875, and did not wake up until 1907.

On the day before Christmas, 1875, she returned from school slightly ill, and went to bed. Although the following morning ushered in the greatest holiday of the year, Caroline slept on, and all efforts to awaken her were futile.

Physicians were unable to diagnose her case, which, after she had been asleep a year, was the subject of interested study by all the medical men of Europe. Caroline slept from girlhood to womanhood, being kept alive by the administration of two or three glasses of milk daily. Two or three times during her sleep she was aroused sufficiently to take a step or two, but always fell back anonscious and continued her sleep. In 1905 a gradual improvement in her ndition was noted and one day in 1907 she suddenly recovered conusness. She was able to recall very detail of her youth and showed o physical weakness or mental defects from her long sleep.
