FOREIGN PRESS OPINION

AMERICAN.

Many Fishermen at Same Pool.
Detroit News: When Mayor Ole Hanson of Seattle resigned "to go fishing" there was natural interest in what he was to fish for, and a Washington correspondent hears that it is the presidency of the United States. That takes pretty good bait.

"With His Own Right Hand."

Baltimore Sun: General Pershing deserves all that can be said in praise of him. If we should be threatened again in the immediate future, we should turn again to him and place our fortunes in his hands. Congress is too niggardly to give him a sword. But he does not need it. He was himself the flaming sword of America in France, and before it the Hohenzollern dynasty tottered and fell.

Why Boys Go Wrong.

St. Louis Globe Democrat: Nothing is so well established in our social conditions as the fact that lack of proper home training is the source of all our juvenile delinquency and our adult crime. The problem the State has to solve is how to supplement home training when it needs supplementing and how to substitute something for it when it does not exist at all, which is one of the purposes of the children's code, soon to be in operation. We need fully rounded citizens. We especially need citizens of good moral character. If Americanism is to continue a civilizing force in the world.

CANADIAN.

The Same Old World.

Sydney Bulletin: The League of Peace starts with a powerful common enemy, for the Lenin-Trotsky party has taken up the mission of imposing its ideas on the world generally, and the world can't afford to be imposed on too much. It has another powerful enemy in Germany, which might resume the war any day, with good chances of success if militarism was let off. It has a multitude of small client States to be assisted. If they are not assisted a new Central European empire will grow again inside a year. It contains a pair of friends and fellow-members who are rather too overwhelming in their strength and their possibilities, and it is necessary to keep an eye on the best of friends, seeing that the right of League to scrap among themselves remains just where it was save for a paper instrument which hasn't even a single policeman on point duty behind it. One way and another it looks much the same old world, except that it has safely negotiated one rapid, and the next one isn't in sight yet, though the roar of it can be heard round the corner.

Waste.

The unemployed worker loses the money he might be earning. The unemployed industry loses money for everybody.
Striking as a settled and deliberate policy is offensive to the average trade unionist, who is a man of family, and therefore, concerned in orderly existence. The restless adventurer who prefers conflict to toil is a natural foe of all such men.
Labor's first need to-day is to increase the purchasing power of money. That result alone will bring a man with a home and a family may general condition in which the work-live contentedly in peace. It cannot come until there is greater production. That which reduces production helps to prolong disordered conditions. The percentage of people who profit by disordered conditions is so small that no one class desires continued discord.—Montreal Star.

ENGLISH.

More Frightfulness.

London Daily Express: The sonorous title of "Städtische elektrisch Strassenbahnschienenreinigungsfrau" has been conferred on the women municipal street cleaners of Cologne.

Chinese Newspapers.

London Daily Express: The average daily circulation of the 400 newspapers in continuous publication in China, we hear, is only about 3,000 copies apiece, but in actual practice is very much larger. This is due to the Chinese habit of never destroying a newspaper but of selling it again and again after it has been read. One copy, indeed, does service to many readers, and only ceases to be read when it falls to pieces.

Translation's Pitfalls.

London Daily News: A member of the Bible Society recently dealt some length with the difficulties attached to translation into obscure tongues. In the language of new Britain there is no word meaning "to forgive." In the Ibo language, current among 3,000,000 tribesmen in Southern Nigeria, the same word has to do for "might" and "right," whilst "servant" and "slave" are synonymous. There is a tribe in Papua which deems the seat of emotion to be the throat, not the heart. Hence "bad throat" means "sorrow," a "throaty" man is a wise man, and "to take the throat" means "to love."

Ben Jonson on Profiteers.

London Daily Chronicle: The great family of profiteers ("Whom did you do in the Great War, Daddy?") may at least claim that they are no mere twentieth century upstarts. Ben Jonson had their ancestry under his eye more than three hundred years ago, and made one of them state his case with cynical bluntness in "Every Man Out of His Humour":—

"O, I shall make my prices as I list . . .

What though a world of wretches starve the while?
He that will thrive must think no courses vile."

Any Rags, Any Bones, Any Bottles.

London Daily Telegraph: As for the itinerant rag and bone dealer, and the man with the barrow who used to shout "Ol' iron!" they seem to have gone out of the business almost entirely; rumor, indeed, says that they have all turned "antique dealers," keep shops, and are doing well. There is a clear course, therefore, for the municipalities, which alone can deal with this problem on proper lines. The amount of stuff thrown away is enormous. Even if there were no prodigality and wastefulness the amount of legitimate waste in every household would still be very large. A few bottles, a few papers, a few bones and scraps and ashes are worth nothing. But there is wealth in the mass, and what remains is fuel for the destructor, and often turns it not to sweetness, at any rate to light. With organization the municipalities will yet work wonders with their waste.

Worms That Stop Trains

That insects should be able to stop a train seems, at first, impossible. It has, however, happened in several instances.

Just lately a train going from Rome to Avezzano, in Italy, was stopped by a dense cloud of locusts, which settled on the wheels and on the rails in swarms. As the train advanced it squashed thousands of them to a pulp, and this made the rails so slippery that the train could not go on.

What is perhaps more extraordinary is that a train should be stopped by worms. This has happened on the Warwick-Killarney line, in Australia. A train suddenly stopped dead, and nothing could be done to restart it. The wheels slid back, but would not advance. The rails were found to be covered with worms, and as in the former case, when squashed by the wheels they made the line too slippery for the train to go forward. This has also been known to happen in Europe, on the line from Brunn to Prague.

In Italy swarms of white butterflies have been known to settle on the railway lines, and so make transit extremely difficult.
Perhaps the most amusing case on record comes from French Guiana, where thousands of little green frogs suddenly took up their abode on a railway track!
