Salts If Backache And Kidneys Hurt

Stop eating meat for a while if your Bladder is troubling you

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms acids which overwork the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and laggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sour, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful of a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice combined with other acids and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine which is irritating thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia water drink.

Says a Corn Acts Like Electric Bell

Tells why a corn is so painful and says cutting makes them grow.

Press an electric button and you form a contact with a live wire which rings the bell. When your shoes press against your corn it pushes its sharp roots down upon a sensitive nerve and you get a shock of pain.

Instead of trimming your corns, when merely makes them grow, just step into any drug store and ask for a quartet of an ounce of Frezzone. This will cost very little but is sufficient to remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet. A few drops applied directly upon a tender aching corn stops the soreness instantly, and soon the corn shrivels up so it is rigid out, root and all, without pain. This drug is harmless and never injures or even irritates the surrounding tissue or skin.

When the door closed after her visitor, Mrs. Ludlow took up the bracelet and examined it closely. "So she is beginning to think that I am black-mailing her," she muttered. "I shall follow her and renew my acquaintance with her mother. How like her she has grown, old Dolly, the quadrone nurse." With these words she opened

From Want To Wealth

By Caroline Hart

"I find," she said, "that you were not to blame so much as I supposed. I am very glad that I was misinformed, and sorry I was so hasty. My mother is very ill again, and the doctor and nurse are with her now. So I told me to tell you to return to Madame Du Crow's at once, and requested me to give you this in payment for your services."

She handed Alice Haywood a five-dollar bill, which the girl took without a word, for she was stricken dumb by the unaccountable change in Miss Clifford's manner.

Had Mr. Nelroppe defended her? She longed to know but dared not inquire. "I need not have blamed you if I had taken time to reflect," resumed Miss Clifford, sipping her coffee, "for Mr. Nelroppe has a silly habit of paying all sorts of compliments to every good-looking servant-girl in the house. I suppose he will acquire more sense as he grows older. I think you had better leave me time in returning to Madame Du Crow's."

"Very well, Miss Clifford, good-morning."

Alice left the room, and in a few moments was in the street, for her hat and cloak were soon donned.

"So, Miss Inouene, whose are disposed of," said the heiress, triumphantly, "and you will meet with a warm reception when you reach Madame Du Crow's, or the money I paid her is wasted. Now I shall interview my troublesome correspondent."

She replaced her small hat and veil, and hastened down to the latest entrance, where the cab she had ordered stood in waiting.

"Drive to No.—East 37th Street," she said, as the driver closed the door after her.

When the carriage drew up before the house bearing the number she had named, Miss Clifford alighted and rang the bell.

"Does Mrs. Isabella Ludlow live here?" she inquired.

"Yes; back room, two flights up," replied a slipshod girl, whose ginger-colored hair was done up in papers.

"Wait for me," said the young lady to the cabman, and she ascended two long narrow flights of stairs, and knocked at the door of the back room.

"Come in," said a harsh female voice, and the visitor obeyed her. She found herself in a bare and shabby room, and in the presence of a tall woman with a coarse, forbidding countenance.

"Well?" said she, apparently not at all impressed by her visitor's elegant dress and valuable jewelry.

"Well."

"I have called here—is there a chair fit to sit upon—in answer to the letters you continue to write to me," said Miss Clifford, coldly.

"You are—"

"Alice Clifford."

The heiress seated herself, and the woman looked at her long and earnestly.

"Yes, I suppose that is what you call yourself," she said, slowly, "but how any one can believe you are Mrs. Clifford's daughter after they once see you passes my comprehension."

"I do not resemble my mother."

A loud, harsh laugh broke from Mrs. Ludlow's lips.

"So you keep up the farce, even with me?" she said, scornfully.

"I know nothing about you, except that you have black-mailed me ever since I was a child," replied the heiress.

"Blackmailed you? Then why do you not hand my letters to the man you call father?"

"I was very young when you wrote to me the first time."

"See here! I am the woman who carried you from the foundling hospital, in St. Paul, Minnesota, to Mr. Clifford's house, and received his daughter in your place. I took care of her till she was a year old, and then gave her up to the woman who at the time I believe you."

The heiress spoke hastily, for she saw the woman was furiously angry.

"You had better believe me, or I shall pay a visit to Mr. Clifford and show him a photograph of his daughter, which I had taken just as she gave her up, also the clothing she wore when she was stolen from her mother's arms."

"Where is this girl now? I shall pay you handsomely if you tell me."

"I can't. I lost sight of the woman years ago, and have tried in vain to find her."

"What was her name?"

"Emma Sutton was her real name; but she often assumed others."

"I would give a great deal to find her."

"So would I. Now, are you prepared to do as I requested?"

"I really am at a loss for money. I have to spend so much on dress."

"If you have no money, you have plenty of jewels. They will answer my purpose."

The woman was evidently in earnest; and Miss Clifford saw that it was useless to argue with her, so she drew off her arm a broad bracelet which was set with emeralds and diamonds, and handed it to her.

Mrs. Ludlow's eyes glistened as she saw the valuable ornament; but she threw it down carelessly, and uttered no word of thanks.

"When you write me again, address your letter to my home in St. Paul," said Miss Clifford, rising to leave.

"Very well; and do not neglect to reply, or I shall address another letter to Mr. Clifford. I may follow you out West. I am tired of New York."

"As you please, good-bye."

When the door closed after her visitor, Mrs. Ludlow took up the bracelet and examined it closely. "So she is beginning to think that I am black-mailing her," she muttered. "I shall follow her and renew my acquaintance with her mother. How like her she has grown, old Dolly, the quadrone nurse." With these words she opened
