Poetry.

[Original.] My Beautiful Picture fairest picture art can paint, Or poet's pen define, not the snow-capped Andes' heights Nor waters of the Rhine.

The fragrant lily of the vale

Nor poet's blonde with ' sunny hair' Such charms and grace impart As this, the picture I will paint And grace with poet's art

I'll take the evening's dullest hue And shade her silken hair, The ringlets o'er her snow-white brov I'll hang with ten'drest care. I'll take the darkest shade of aight, And paint with gentle hand, The sparkling eyes that love alone Can read and understand.

I'll take the blush from Eden's rose And gently paint her cheek, With Vesper's hue I'll touch her lips Just ready now to speak. I'll take the tint of early morn

That fills the eastern skies:
To fix the dimple in her chin
And shade her laughing eyes. I'll take the hue of Autumn's blight That walks with chilling feet; And draw expression's fair at lines Where love and beauty meet.

And when this picture is complete
Its beauty to unfold,
The heart will feel, the lips will own The half has not been told. Durcis.
