

We do not find any reason for discrediting him, and he must take the legal consequences.

Further, if the agreement that was contemplated between the parties in the following February had been carried out, it was only applicable to the future, and would not have put the plaintiff in any better position than he was in previously, as the sale had already taken place.

This appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

---