lem of the sexes in society from the beginning.

It was held that Christianity brought income the mancipation to woman. This was true and also not true, said Mr. Griggs. Marriage was permitted as a concession to human weakness by the middle age churches. The virgin type was honored, but the wife and mother were slighted. This reverence for certain types had the effect of delaying the emancipation of women. Mr. Griggs spoke severely of the condition of women in the military Littons of Europe. Where militarism is dominant, women have been forced into despised avenues of industrialism of military man. Mr. Griggs gave many examples of the social disability forced upon women in European cidies, and of the contempt felt there for the man who in American fashion would assist the woman in bearings her burdens. In condemning militarism as a system, he distinguished between this and the of Social Reform.
