Knox has resided in Oskaloosa for about 30 years, during which time he has lived the life of a recluse. He repulsed all efforts to bring him in closer touch with the people about him. It was always supposed that he was in abject poverty, but he always fiercely resisted all offers of assistance. During his last illness he would not admit any one to his presence, and would have died all alone and unattended had not the neighbors forced themselves to his bedside. After his death, which occurred amid the meanest surroundings, a search among his effects revealed the presence of the chest of gold coin.
