Mr. Adam Bell (Pictou) could not help contrasting Sir Richard's speech with speeches of the Hon. Minister when in Opposition. It showed how far he had traveled since. Sir Richard seemed to have forgotten that he sat for a constituency in a province which had practically condemned the Government. The Mindster of Trade and Commerce made the bold assertion that the kindly sentiment awakened in England by the preference had increased Canadian exports to England. Mr. Bell did not believe in that assertion. He was willing to believe it if proof could be offered. Canada exports to England had increased, certainly, but Canada's exports to the United States and countries to which no preference was given. countries to which no preference was given had increased to a much larger extent—lengiand was eighth in the list.
