THE DEPARTURE.

Tis noon!—across the broad blue sea,
The galiant bark speeds proudly on;
And joy-lit eyes look up to see
Her pennons floating in the sun.
The whirling eddies mark her way,
And 'neath her prow, the snow-winte spray,
Lake newly crumbled silver gleams
And sparkles in the day-god's beams!
The up to the sea, build sports beside

This eve!—the sca-bird sports beside
Her glowing path-way o'er the deep,
Where, like a war-horse nerved with pride,
From wave to wave she seems to leap.
Each pulse is quickened, as the blast.
Distends the sail or bends the mast;
And when the sun hath left the sky,
Hope warms the heart and lights the eye.

Alone—upon a beetling hill,
That braves the ocean's breaking surge—
The fond young wife is lingering sull,
And gazing on the horizon's verge.
One long, long look of love—the last!
The proud ship from her sight hath passed!
She turns away—she breatnes a prayer—
Her hope, her love, her heart is there!

Speed on, speed on, thou gallant barque!
That gentle heart is with thee now,
Where tempests gather fierce and dark,
Or favoring breezes gently blow:—
That love shall bless thy sunny path,
That hope defy the storm-god's wrath;
And thou shalt bring, from o'er the main,
The wanderer to his home again!
