Who Should Have Soldier's Last Kiss?

ome interesting correspondence when he raised the question, "Who should have the last kiss?" It was suggested to him by an incident he noticed on the departure of a troop train from one of the great London stations. Two women had come to say good-bye to a young soldier, one obviously his mother, the soldier, one obviously his mother, the other his sweetheart. Both were in tears, but the girl seemed to be weeping the more bitterly. The soldier kissed the girl half a dozen times. Then the mother said something gently to him, and, raising her face, he kissed her tenof new goods, we require some time to get ready. I am instructed to sell at Public Auction at 157 Brussels street, commencing Friday night at 7.30, several thousand dollars worth of Christmas goods, including Dolls, Toys, Games, Sleds, Skates, Books, China Cups and Saucers, Silverware, Watches, Clocks, Shaker Flannel, Curtains, Towels, Table Covers, Men's Socks, Men's and Boys' Sweaters, Wool Gloves, Handkerchiefs, Hand Bags, Toilet Soaps, Perfume, Manicure Sets, Toilet Sets, Silk Waists, Men's Shirts and a great variety of use-manicure Shirts and a great variety of use-manicure for the Girls.

and, raising her face, he kissed her tenderly and, raising her face, he kissed her window of the window of the window of the window of the window, and as the shout of "Stand back, there!" echoed along the platform has tructed to sell at whistle blew, and as the shout of "Stand back, there!" echoed along the platform has tructed to sell at train began to move kissed the soldier, perhaps for the last time. The mother walked along the platform, however, and, clinging to the window, she kissed and was kissed, risking death for this farewell embrace. "Who should have had the last kiss?" asked the writer in the Star, "the mother or the girl?"
