DID MUCH FOR
HUMAN RACE

Japanese Who Died Recently in New York Had Made Important Discoveries in Medicine.

Dr. Jokichi Takamine, foremost Japanese in American, known everywhere for his achievements in chemistry, who died recently in New York, did much for the human race by his two great discoveries, adrenalin and takadistase. He discovered adrenalin in 1900 when experimenting with glands of sheep. It is now manufactured from bovine glands. Its great virtue is the driving away of blood when applied to a living tissue, removing largely the danger of hemorrhage in operations, particularly in nose and throat, where formerly profuse bleeding made the surgeon's work difficult and hazardous. Adrenalin has made bloodless surgery possible in some cases. It also raises blood pressure through the contraction of small arteries. It gives the heart a squeeze, sending the blood ahead, and has saved the lives of many persons who seemed to be dying.

Takadistase, Dr. Takamine discovered in 1904. It is obtained from a fungus growth, mainly on the rice plant, known as Aspergillus oryzae. It is used in Japan in fermentation of sake, or rice beer, and is in general use for starch digesting.

Dr. Takamine worked to promote understanding friendship between the lands of his birth and adoption. He was born November 3, 1854, at Kanazawa City, in Kaga Province, a samurai of the Kanazawa clan. He was graduated from the engineering college of the Imperial University at Tokyo in 1879 and was then sent as a government student

For three years to the University of Glasgow and the Andersonian University of Glasgow. Returning to Japan, he was chemist of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce. His appointment as Commissioner to the Cotton Centennial World's Fair in New Orleans was the turning point in his life. In 1885 he married Miss Caroline Hiltch of New Orleans and five years later, after returning to Japan to erect at Tokyo the first superphosphate works, he settled in the United States. A company was formed in Chicago for the manufacture of takadistase.

He established a research laboratory in a cellar in New York and there, isolating the active principle of the suprarenal glands, he discovered adrenalin. He also originated the process for recovery of glycine from the printer's roll and was interested in the extraction of nitro-
