SOLDIERS' CLAIMS.

The militia department at Ottawa has been deluged with letters from troops who served in South Africa with respect to their war gratuity from the imperial government. The Toronto Globe, in alkuding to the subject, says: A short time ago the imperial authorities sent a list of 350 names in connection with the gratuity and the militia department issued the cheques the same day. The issue of these obeques has aroused the other Canadians not yet reported upon, and the flood of letters has been the consequence. The department cannot issue cheques until it receives the names from London. There will be no delay here in the issuing of the cheques when the names are received. It is expected about 3,000 claims will be paid.

grief, she displayed signals of distress and was towed into port by two officers of the law. The liquid food partaken of by Margaret last night was much more powerful than the pancakes she said sits used to have in the East Riding of Cork, and though she is pretty well accustomed to taking her medicine straight, it made her kindly disposed to everyone, and Godsee loved the world. Margaret remembers the day when she drank tea with the best people in town, but that is some time ago, and she has got far beyond the tea-drinking stage. Before the magistrate this morning she in a very meek tone pleaded guilty to the charge of being drunk on Carmarthen street, and was fined eight dollars or two months in jull with hard labor. She devoutly expressed the hope that the fine would be paid.

Mrs. Jones, a colored resident of Pond street, appeared to state that yeaterday one of the police had forced an entrance into her house, giving as his reason that he had been informed she was harboring a dog belonging to a man named McConaghan. This action Mrs. Jones 'did not think exactly fair, for it served to show that Mr. McConaghan was regarded as an honest person, while she was not. The dog also appeared in court as a witness, but as McConaghan did not show up, both it and Mrs. Jones were dismissed.

James Doyle, who broke the windows in the Seamen's Mission on Prince William street, was brought-up teday. Mr. Cosman did not wish to prosecute, but was willing to let the matter drop on payment of three dollars for the damage done. Doyle said that he had previously offered to pay Mr. Cosman the three dollars, but it had been refused, and now, owing to the decreased value of glass he was only willing to pay two dollars, which was all he possessed. This liberal offer was not accepted, and during a lull in the proceedings, while mo one appeared to beloking. Doyle took the opportunity of counting his money again, and to the great surprise of nimself and everyone else, found that he had more than two dollars. On Mr. Cosman again expressi

plained that for a perfect exhibition of hypnotism there must be five things, concentration of thought, animal magnetism, suggestion, obedience, and imagination. Without these the thing was impossible. Having explained the theory and practice of the science he performed a number of physical and mental experiments on his subjects, to the great amusement of the audience and the wonder of the gentlemen themselves. The subjects were told to clasp their hands, and having done so found it impossible to open them until ordered to do so. McEwen seemed able to do, as he pleased with this class, and it afforded no little wonder to the audience to see how obediently they followed out his suggestions. In one experiment the subjects were enjoying a comfortable sleep on the platform, and were told that when they woke up they would imagine that someone had just told them a very funny story. On waking every one indulged in the most hearty laughter, which continued until the professor brought them out of the hypnotic state. Another experiment which seemed wonderful to the audience was the freedom from physical pain experienced by the class and different gentlemen through the hall. In many cases pins were thrust through the tongue. It was an interesting test, but one which made many ladies shudder. As a conclusion to the entertailment one young man was put in a state of catalepsy, and in this condition four men stood upon his rigid body, supported on two chairs. The whole entertailment was most interesting, and all who were present last evening came away with the impression that McEwen is a wonder. It was extremely funny to see his hypnotic class rush down through the audience selling imaginary peanuts, making change and shouting their wares.
