Allies Repulse Germans in Fighting Along Coast but Recapture of Ostend Unconfirmed DOMINION SAVINGS

But Invaders Must Defeat Full Force of Allies Before They Will be Allowed to Take Dunkirk.

(Special to The Journal of Commerce.) London, October 20.—It was admitted at the War Office that although the Allies had gained a temporary advantage over the Germans in the latter's drive on the coast it was still too early to claim that any great victory had been won. Reports from correspondents stating that Ostend had been captured by the Allies, that General von Kluck's army was in great danger and that the German Channel army was in peril of destruction were dismissed curtly with the word "unconfirmed."

At the Belgian Legation, it was stated that there was no confirmation of the report that Ostend had been recaptured.

It is permitted to state that no particular effort is being made to recapture Ostend. If the Ger-mans are forced to retire, that city will be again occupied by the Allies, but bigger things are at stake in the conflict in Belgium than mere possession spared to keep the Germans from Dunkirk. This line across the department of Pas de Caiais, the Gerport is of great importance to the Allies for obvious reasons, and if the Germans succeeded in reaching it they will first have to defeat all of the forces that the Allies can muster without weakening other parts of the battle front.

International developments involving possible participation of Turkey, Roumania and Italy in the war, held a large place in general interest to-day. That important developments may be looked for very soon, is the general belief in diplomatic cir-

The Reuter Agency received the following dispatch from its correspondent at Chiasso, Switzerland:-

"The situation between Italy and Austria is becoming graver daily. Notwithstanding efforts to prevent friction, Prince von Hohenlohe, the Governor of Trieste, has declared his moral conviction that he will soon have evidence that the fire at Monfalcone dockyard was due to an Italian conspiracy." Heavy and continuous rains have caused a lull in the fighting along the main battle line in Russian

Poland. In Galicia, however, the fighting continues, both

Austrians and Russfans claiming victories.

According to a correspondent, the Kaiser was at the Czar's shooting seat at Spala, where he often is stated at the War Office, the Austro-German was a guest of the Russian ruler. His presence, according to the Russian reports, did not go towards making the German defeat less decisive. The Rusmaking determined attacks during the last few sians are getting ready to take the offensive in Poland, according to Petrograd despatches to-day.

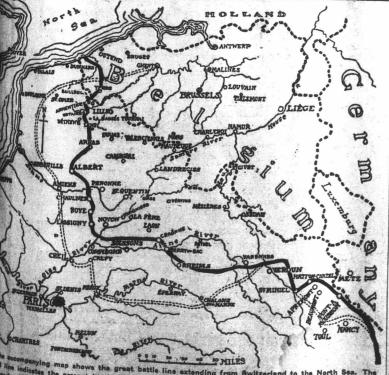

The heavy rains have turned the fighting zone of the German attackers, have been conducted at a great disadvantage.

On the line from Arras to Roye, the French claim to have advanced their lines, especially near Proyart. The French War Office states that quiet still prevails along the centre, where both sides have weak-ened their lines by sending out reinforcements. The Germans withdraw Germans withdrew troops, from that zone to reinforce their right, while the French sent troops from their centre to both the east and west wings. Violent fighting continues on the eastern front, where the French are pressing hard against the Ger-

The vigorous fighting on both sides of the Verdun-Le Toul line it now appears was a move to prevent the Germans from establishing their heavy artillery within range of the French forts.

"The situation in the west shows little change. The crop. remnant of the Belgian army is opposing our Antwerp army near the coast. The French and British our advance, are leaving the burden of the conflict to the Belgians, who are showing great bravery.

"The enemy in this theatre of war seems to have exhausted his reinforcements, and to have weakened Poland into a swamp and operations, especially for his line by extending it in an effort to keep out roops from the coast."

It is frankly admitted by the German officers that the long resistance of Verdun has interfered with the German offensive campaign. The fall of that fortress will release a great force that has been trying to effect its fall for many weeks.

"The Annapolis Valley is about one hundred miles he district. The plan is as follows: in length and averages a width of four miles in all. There is a railroad running the entire length. A series of small companies have been formed, o each district, with stations on the railroad. The farmers do not pack their apples but cart them to their own particular packing station and thence they are shipped to the main shipping base at Berwick. There, the apples are credited to each farmer acording to his pack. Packing them in this manner keeps the quality in each and every barrel to a certain well-defined standard and they are then spected by the companies' own inspectors, who sork independent of the Government.
