A man will generally give you his advice without charge, but you will often be cheated if you take it.

DRINKING.—The best draught serveth for health—the second for pleasure—the third for shame—and the fourth for madness.

None have less praise than those who hunt most after it.

Our greatest glory consists in never falling, but in rising every time we fall.

Strong minds are like fine-grained wood, which kindles slowly, but burns long.

Never accept of a small vessel, for large ships run aground, little boats may sink.

An Ohio man with twelve children and no money or work has committed suicide, and people are actually wondering why he did it.

It is wise and well to look on the cloud of sorrow as though we expect it to turn into a rainbow.

The adage of "charity begins at home" is often nothing but a handsome mask worn by deformed selfishness.

An Englishwoman is alleged to have walked 1,500 miles in 1,000 hours. She was probably hunting a husband.

A quarrel is, nine times out of ten, merely the fermentation of a misunderstanding.

If we knew all we desired to know, man would be no longer man.

Martin Farquhar Tupper has been lecturing on "Flying." The lecture was practically illustrated by the hasty departure of most of his audience in the middle of the performance.

A popular Author says, "I have no propensity to envy anyone, least of all the rich and the great: but if I was disposed to this weakness, the subject of my envy would be a young man, in full possession of his strength and faculties, going forth in a morning to work for his wife and children, or bringing them home his wages at night."

There is a student at the Phillips Exeter Academy who has learned to live on 8 cents a day. We had no idea that any College in America diffused such valuable education as a part of its course.—American Paper.

Wouldn't this be a better and more popular chair for Dr. Rand to establish for Acadia than Didactic?

* The man in Missouri who fought a dynamite cartridge to see if it would burn, knows now. But circumstances are such that he cannot tell the result of his investigation, except through a spiritual medium.
